Col. Knox denies knowledge of any effort on part of his friends to woo Illinois delegates from districts carried by Senator Borah.

Church Vote Sought.

By Franklyn Waltman.

An effort to rally behind President Roosevelt the support of church, prohibition, educational and peace groups was seen last night in the announcement from the office of Dr. Stanley High, whose salary is paid by the Democratic National Committee, of an organization to be known as the "Good Neighbor League."

Although the organization was described as "non-partisan," Dr. High is understood to be the moving spirit behind it. Patrick Henry Callahan of Louisville, Ky., an ardent Catholic dry; Mrs. Estelle M. Sternberger, outstanding worker for Jewish charities and a worker in the peace movement, and Dr. High, an ordained Protestant clergyman, will comprise the executive committee of the organization.

Announcement of the formation of the organization was made from Dr. High's office in the Munsey Building after President Roosevelt had received George Foster Peabody, Georgia banker and a director of the Warm Springs Foundation, and Miss Lillian D. Wald, noted social worker. They were described as co-chairmen of the Good Neighborhood League.

Human Values First.

One of the ideals of the new organization, according to the announcement, is a recognition that "human values come before property values; that the long-time prosperity of property requires the long-time well-being of people; that the American answer to the revolutionist is the removal of those injustices which make revolution."

"Good Neighbors" joining the league will be asked to pledge themselves to work for these principles and "to stand ready to oppose those policies, movements and persons in our country which threaten that principle and to support those which are now seeking to advance it."

The announcement said it is planned to "establish State leagues, with State boards of directors, to serve as organizing centers for the extension of the good-neighbor idea and for the distribution of the literature which the league will publish." A series of radio programs and the publication of a series of booklets, "some of which are already prepared for distribution," also were listed among the plans.

BEN KING.

King Shatters Altitude Record In Flight From Langley Field

Washington Sportsman-Pilot Soars to Height Exceeding 18,000 Feet in Tiny Land Plane; Already Holds Six Official Marks.

Soaring up into the sky over Langley Field, Va., to a reported altitude of 18,000 feet in a tiny land plane weighing less than 440 pounds, Ben King, Washington's famous sportsman-pilot, unofficially shattered still another aviation record yesterday.

King's barograph recorded a few feet in excess of the 18,000 mark, officials of the National Aeronautic Association were informed by telephone late yesterday. The instrument will be hastened to Washington for examination at the Bureau of Standards before the record becomes official.

Present record for altitude in the type of plane King flew is 17,037 feet, held by the French flier G. Fauvel following a flight over Le Bourget Field in France in 1929.

King said he took off at 12:57 p. m. His flight lasted 1 hour and 55 minutes, and 1 hour and 33 minutes of this time was spent in piloting his wasplike craft to its record height.

For the flight King wore a suit of elderdown, and inside this heavy wool pajamas. He used special light oxygen equipment, made for him at Langley Field, and inhaled extra oxygen through what officials described as a "pipe stem" tube.

"I've smashed the mark," he said.

Mrs. King left last night for Norfolk to meet her husband.

Plebiscite Plan Stirs Factions In Puerto Rico

By Felix Bruner.

The issue of Puerto Rican independence threatened yesterday to set off a charge of dynamite in that extremely volatile island as leaders began to take sides on the question.

The insular Legislature at San Juan was suddenly adjourned upon news of introduction of the independence bill by Senator Tydings (Democrat), Maryland, and political lines were being drawn in anticipation of the impending controversy.

Confirming the fact that the Administration is backing the movement to give the islanders the right to decide whether they will continue as a possession of the United States or become an independent country, Dr. Ernest Gruening, director of the Division of Territories and Island Possession, gave it his indorsement.

Discussing the Tydings bill, providing a referendum on the subject next year, Gruening said that "nothing could be further from the spirit and purpose of this Administration than to keep a people, not consulted originally about its annexation, under our flag if they do not desire to be there."

The attitude of at least one group of Puerto Ricans was expressed by Luis Munoz-Marin, Liberal Party leader, who charged that the Tydings bill "has the characteristics of

Michigan's Bloc To Offer Name Of Vandenberg

G. O. P. Convention Tells Delegates to Back Him in June Convention.

By the Associated Press

Detroit, April 24. — Declaring United States Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg "one of the major eligibles," the Republican State convention today instructed its delegation to the national convention to present his name and act according to its "best judgment."

It was announced from the convention platform that Senator Vandenberg had requested specifically no binding instructions be placed on the delegation.

The convention, seeking a "harmony" program, avoided one floor fight when it capitulated to a demand by former Gov. Wilber M. Brucker to be named a delegate at large to the national convention. Because Brucker will oppose Senator James Couzens for the Senatorial nomination this year, the convention action was regarded by some Couzens' adherents as a direct thrust at him. They had hoped to win the honor for Michigan's senior Senator, but were ignored in the slate finally chosen.

Besides Brucker, the delegates at large will be Gov. Frank D. Fitzgerald, former Gov. Fred W. Green and Herbert J. Rushton, of Escanaba.

Resolutions adopted by the convention criticized what were termed "extravagances of the Democratic Administration," and advocated "the

The divorce which thrice-married Capt. Thomas Hay Nixon, Army ordnance officer, obtained from Annette Pauline Nixon, wife No. 2, was set aside yesterday in Gettysburg, Pa.

Judge W. C. Sheely, according to the Associated Press, held that Capt. Nixon was not a legal resident of Gettysburg when he obtained the divorce.

A few days after the Gettysburg divorce—now declared invalid—was granted him, Capt. Nixon, who is credited with inventing a speedy Army tank, married Miss Anne Cooke, of Chevy Chase, Md.

Last February, in Baltimore, the third Mrs. Nixon became the mother of twins.

The second Mrs. Nixon, who was Annette Finnerton, of Boston, a former "Scandals" actress, began her fight to have the Gettysburg divorce set aside in October, 1935. She charged that she knew nothing of the divorce until she read in the newspapers that Capt. Nixon had married Miss Cooke.

She contended that Nixon was not a legal resident of Gettysburg when the divorce was granted him by Judge Donald P. McPherson. Judge Sheely, McPherson's successor, devoted 20 of the 29 pages in his opinion to upholding this contention.

Capt. Nixon maintained that he had personal effects at his mother's home in Gettysburg. This, Judge Sheely said, was not enough. Residence, he said, was a "physical fact," and possessions in a home were not necessarily proof of his residence.

A man must live in a house to make it his home, the judge said.

The marital troubles of Capt. Nixon and his second wife have been aired in the courts here sev-

Wendel Case Linked to N.J. 'Higher-Ups'

Latter Reported Fleeing; Alarm Out in Eight Eastern States.

By the United Press.

New York, April 24.—Several "public officials of New Jersey" are involved in the kidnaping of Paul H. Wendel, District Attorney William F. X. Geoghan said tonight.

He declined to name them, but announced his investigation would go "beyond the five men now under indictment" and find those responsible for the kidnaping of Wendel, a disbarred Trenton attorney whose "confession" of the Lindbergh baby murder delayed the execution of Bruno Hauptmann three days.

Ellis Parker, the rural New Jersey detective who spends much of his time chasing chicken thieves, was ordered tonight to arrest his son, Ellis, jr.—one of the five men indicted on charges of kidnaping and torturing Wendel. New Jersey State police have sent an alarm through eight Eastern States for young Parker's arrest.

Geoghan said young Parker, an employe of the New Jersey Motor Fuel Tax Division, arranged the kidnaping, disguised with a false mustache and dark glasses. As soon as he was indicted, Geoghan added, he fled from his Mount Holly home in an automobile that was going 80 miles an hour.

Ordered to Arrest Son.

The elder Parker is chief of detectives of Burlington County, N. J. His son lives in that county, and therefore District Attorney William F. X. Geoghan, of Kings County, called on Parker to arrest his son.

The elderly, round-faced Parker scratched his bald head in bewilderment as he stood outside the Elks Club in Mount Holly, N. J., and was told he had just been given his most important assignment. Momentarily he seemed to have lost all the cunning that earned him such an awesome reputation for the solution of homicide cases.

"Why, I haven't any idea where to find Ellis," the elder Parker said. "I've been looking for him all day."

While waiting for Parker to be arrested, Geoghan outlined the people's case against him. He said the indictment of Parker, Murray Bleefeld, Harry Bleefeld, Harry Weiss and Martin Schlossman was only the start of the Wendel investigation.

"We will go beyond those indictments," Geoghan said, "and get the men who were behind it all."

Hoffman Ordered Aid.

The Wendel confession came at a time when Gov. Harold G. Hoffman of New Jersey—who believes Hauptmann had accomplices in the Lindbergh crime—was looking for some excuse for keeping the condemned German alive. But since Geoghan already has said that Hoffman had no connection with the Wendel incident, there was no indication who Geoghan was talking about when he mentioned "the men behind this." It was Hoffman, however, who detached young Parker from his regular duties and assigned him to the Hauptmann investigation.

Wendel said he was picked up in New York February 14 by men who took him to a house in the Sheepshead Bay section.

"Parker was the 'finger man' for the gang," Geoghan said, "and he was the one who furnished the handcuffs used on Wendel. He came over to New York and introduced himself as 'Al White.' Schlossman thought White was a New Jersey detective who was trying to find the real Lindbergh kidnaper. So Schlossman agreed to help.

"On the night of February 14 Schlossman, Murray Bleefeld and Harry Weiss met Parker in the Hotel Martinique here in New York. Parker had hired the room and from this room he could see Wendel in his room in the Hotel Stratford next door.

"When Wendel left his room in the Stratford that night, young Parker and the three other kidnapers left Parker's room and met Wendel on the street outside. Schlossman drove the car. Wendel was in the back seat between Murray Bleefeld and Harry Weiss. They drove past Manhattan police headquarters, across the Manhattan bridge and to the house on Voorhies avenue.

"Ellis Parker, jr., drove his own car and arrived at the Voorhies house shortly after the others. Parker, jr., was at the Voorhies avenue house practically every day while Wendel was there and he slept in that house every night."

Geoghan said young Parker stood by while his accomplices tortured

Fuad Gravely Ill Of Heart Disease

Physicians admitted that the condition of his majesty, who is 68, is causing "grave anxiety." He has been king since 1917, when he succeeded his brother, Hussein Kamil.

The king has been in poor health for some time. It was understood he is suffering from heart disease.

The King suffered a serious hemorrhage tonight.

King Fuad's illness was aggravated by heart weakness resulting from an attack of pleurisy in January, 1934. The intense political battles in which he has engaged recently have hindered recovery.

It is believed that should he die during the present Anglo-Egyptian negotiations, an uneasy situation would develop.

Troops Rout Rebel Forces In Honduras

Many in Insurgent Band Reported Slain; Rest of Nation 'Quiet.'

By the Associated Press.

Tegucigalpa, Honduras, April 24. The presence of a revolt in Honduras was admitted by the government today when it claimed victory in two battles, one with the use of airplanes.

A communique said that four military planes bombed rebel forces, while the latter were engaging infantry and that the insurgents then fled into Nicaragua, leaving many slain comrades behind.

Another rebel group, said the government, which has been in the mountains of the Olancho District under the command of Juan Blas Paguaga, was completely routed.

Describing the airplane battle, the communique said a group of Honduran rebels were on the Nicaraguan border and, when hard pressed by Nicaraguan National Guardsmen, crossed into Honduras and attacked the town of Paraiso.

Troops of this country faced the rebels, repelling a vigorous attack, the statement continued. Then four airplanes flew over the rebels, dropping many bombs and machine-gunning them, causing "tremendous havoc."

Claim Rebels Routed.

The rebels, the government claimed, were completely routed, only three government troops were wounded, and the "rest of the country is peaceful."

In Mexico City Senora Anita Lagos de Lopez Guiterrez, widow of a former President of Honduras, said she had received information Thursday indicating the rebels had defeated loyal troops about 35 miles southeast of Tegucigalpa and drove them into Nicaragua.

She said she understood rebels were advancing on the capital from three sides.

The Honduran Minister to Nicaragua said the government had dispersed a small group of rebels and the nation was "entirely peaceful."

A United States destroyer recently was sent to Honduran waters from the Canal Zone to intercept United States vessels allegedly smuggling ammunition to Honduran revolutionists, but was recalled.

A new constitution became effective in Honduras April 15. Tiburcio Carias Andino has been President of Honduras since February, 1933.

Battle Is Reported At San Marcos Colon

San Jose, Costa Rica, April 24 (AP).—Dispatches from Managua, Nicaragua, stated today a battle was fought at San Marcos Colon, Honduras, between rebels and loyal troops.

The revolters, these accounts said, were commanded by Gen. Samayoa and Gen. Bertrand Auduray.

Lindbergh Ransom Reported Cashed

Boston, April 24 (AP).—The Post says Department of Justice agents were concentrated tonight in Massachusetts and southern New Hampshire after discovery that more than $20,000 of the $50,000 Lindbergh ransom money was found in this section.

Since Bruno Richard Hauptmann died in the electric chair at Trenton, N. J., for the kidnap-murder of Col. Charles A. Lindberg's infant son, the money has appeared at two banks in Albany, N. Y.; Northampton, Springfield, Worcester and Greenfield, Mass. Officials who declined use of their names said they believed bills are about to be cashed in southern New Hampshire.

The Post says indications were that persons traveling northeastward from a point near Albany, N. Y., disposed of the ransom notes in bills of $20, $10 and $5 denominations.

Although the money was in United States currency of old gold certificates which President Franklin D. Roosevelt ordered declared and reported three years ago, all banks are now cashing and clearing these bills without question by authority of a special Treasury order rescinding rules against cashing such certificates.

Troops Control Poona After Day of Rioting

Poona, India, April 24 (AP).—Troops were in control of this tense city tonight after all day rioting between Moslems and Hindus in which nearly 100 were injured.

The soldiers stood guard at a bridge in the center of the city and at the Kasharet Mosque. Two mosques and four Hindu shrines were burned and attempts were made to burn a number of others.

The rioting started from a quarrel, when music was played in front of a Hindu temple. A crowd of 5,000 Hindus and Mohammedans soon gathered and began fighting. Troops were called out after 300 policemen were unable to quell the disorders.

Threat to Workers Denied by Beiter

Administration Seeks to Defeat Action by Representative.

Reports that $700,000,000 in new WPA relief estimates may be submitted to Congress if a rebellious House, bent on earmarking funds for permanent PWA projects, sidetracks that amount from the $1,500,000,000 relief bill, were heard yesterday on Capitol Hill.

These reports, from usually reliable quarters, were coupled with the threat of $700,000,000 in additional taxes to finance such an increase in the President's present relief budget.

Strong Administration pressure to defeat the earmarking drive, led by Representative Alfred F. Beiter (Democrat), of New York, became evident, and Beiter was kept busy denying reports that his move might result in many WPA workers losing their jobs.

Beiter advanced facts and figures in an effort to show that the WPA setup can continue in operation with no labor reduction if funds are provided out of the pending relief appropriation to continue the public works program.

A show-down on the earmarking drive will come next week. Beiter already has 137 signatures on petitions favoring the $700,000,000 PWA allocation, and more than half that many more commitments. The petitions will be laid before the President Tuesday or Wednesday. If he turns down the request, Beiter will call a House Democratic caucus in an effort to bind Democratic support for his plan.

Inquiry Monday.

Meanwhile, the Senate prepared to consider a favorable report on the Davis resolution, calling for an investigation of politics in relief, at 2 p. m. Monday. The investigation, if approved, presumably would be conducted by the Senate Committee on Expenditures, headed by Senator J. Hamilton Lewis (Democrat), Illinois. A prominent Democratic member of that committee, Senator Frederick Van Nuys, of Indiana, yesterday assailed WPA "boondoggling" in Indianapolis, according to Associated Press dispatches from the Indiana capital.

Van Nuys was quoted as saying he has positive proof that precinct committeemen in Indiana have been put to work on WPA jobs at $150 a month to attempt to control delegates to the Democratic State convention.

He said the evidence was such that "it could not go on without tacit approval of those in charge."

"I am going to take this to the floor of the Senate," Van Nuys was quoted as saying. "I am against boondoggling."

Investigation of politics in relief was asked by Senator James J. Davis (Republican), Pennsylvania. Approved by the House Expenditures Committee, his resolution awaits action on a request for $5,000 to finance the inquiry, still pending before the Senate Committee on Audit and Control.

Senate consideration of the resolution next week is expected to signalize a free-for-all, bipartisan airing of every phase of the relief question. A special committee on election expenditures already is authorized to inquire into any reports of relief money used in the campaign.

Adequate Funds.

Attacked in his home State by Lester W. Herzog, up-State New York works progress administrator, who charged thousands of WPA workers will be thrown out of jobs if funds are earmarked for PWA, Beiter replied that the WPA still will have adequate funds to continue relief work on a par with that conducted in the past.

"On March 31," Beiter said, "there remained an unobligated balance from the $4,880,000,000 appropriation of 1935 of $1,042,000,000, which

1,500 Groups Ready to Join Chamber Rally

Delegates to Gather Over Week-end; New Deal Attack Expected.

Faced with an agenda packed with controversial questions, representatives of approximately 1,500 local chambers of commerce will gather in Washington over the week-end preparatory to four days of detailed discussion next week in the twenty-fourth annual meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

A savage dissection of the measures of the New Deal is expected, as the opposition of trade and industrial leaders to the Administration's methods and procedure is believed to have mounted since last year, when the President responded sharply to chamber criticism of the NRA and other emergency programs.

Although the meet is apparently without the President's personal benison this year, two Cabinet members, Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper and Secretary of State Cordell Hull, will appear on the program, it was announced yesterday.

Secretary Roper will make an address at the general session Tuesday morning on "Increasing Employment and Production." Secretary Hull will speak at the general session Friday morning on "American Foreign Trade Policies."

Re-employment Topic.

Heading the long list of subjects will be re-employment by industry and trade. The President's reiterated demand that business men take up the slack in lagging reemployment will be given complete consideration, officials declared yesterday. President Harper Sibley of the Chamber has said:

"The President has called upon trade and industry to extend its operations so as to absorb an increasing number of the unemployed. This meeting offers the opportunity for considering every means to this end."

Besides Secretary Roper's discussion of this problem, Lewis H. Brown, president of the Johns-Manville Corporation, will talk on "Increasing Employment by Private enterprise," and four speeches on facets of the problem will be made in one of the group sessions.

The development and status of foreign trade will be studied widely, in group sessions, where a number of talks are scheduled; in Secretary Hull's speech and in a talk by R. C. Matthews of Toronto, Canada, on "Canadian Relations."

In this connection the chamber yesterday released a review "Our World Trade in 1935," compiled by the organization's foreign commerce department. The study cited

Wadsworth Declares Proposed Measure Is 'Vindictive.'

House Is Berated For 'Indifference'

New Yorker Declares Program Step Toward Imperialism.

By Robert C. Albright.

Constitutionality of the Administration's corporate tax proposals was studied yesterday by the Senate Finance Committee, as the House heard one Democrat and various Republicans rip into the bill as "thriftless" and a threat to the life of thousands of corporations.

Continuing their critical analysis of the measure, several members of the Senate Finance Committee questioned the bill's validity, and called on the Treasury to supply a brief on constitutional points in question.

Lack of tax uniformity, resulting from special concessions granted debt-ridden companies, was stressed by some Democratic committee members. At the request of Josiah W. Bailey, of North Carolina, Herman Oliphant, Treasury general counsel, agreed to prepare a brief on the subject.

Despite wide bipartisan criticism within the Senate group, Chairman Pat Harrison insisted he does not anticipate "any great amount of trouble in getting a bill out."

Vindictiveness Charged.

He said the idea seemed to be: "Drag the little fellow in, try to shake him down. Why? Because you made a mistake and passed the AAA."

"It was born in a spirit of vindictiveness," he said of the windfall tax. "Somebody had to get even with somebody else in order to get even for their error."

Wadsworth declared the proposed tax on corporate earnings, based on the volume of dividends withheld from distribution, "is disciplining the management of business by penalizing the thrift of a corporation."

He said he had looked over the speeches of the President and his "lieutenants" and "in none of these utterances have I been able to find the word 'thrift.' Not once has the President of the United States urged on his people frugality."

Power Concentrated.

He charged the Administration with trying to get around Supreme Court decisions.

"If we follow this road to its natural goal," he said, "we shall no longer be a Federal union of States, we will be an empire, with power concentrated in a bureaucracy at Washington, which with the stroke of a pen can tell me how many acres I can plant, and tell you how much you can save."

Meanwhile, a scattering of House members heard Representative James W. Wadsworth, New York Republican, denounce the philosophy of the bill, in which he said "thrift counts for nothing and discipline counts for everything." Preceding him, one Democratic conservative, Representative Arthur P. Lamneck, of Ohio, challenged constitutional authority "to compel business institutions to follow our bidding."

Wadsworth, a former Senator, gentleman farmer, and frequently mentioned as Presidential timber, lectured the House severely for its poor attendance during tax debate, declaring it was in inverse ratio to the importance of the measure. There were only about 34 members in the House at the time.

"It is this kind of situation which puts the Senate in control of legis-

Is Politics a Factor in Handling Relief?

IT HAS BEEN claimed that persons on relief stand a better chance of receiving aid if they vote for the "right" party. Do American voters feel that this is true in their communities?

AND . . . DO the voters feel that it is time to turn relief responsibility back to State and local governments? For the answers, see N. J. Jobless Army Still Holds Chamber; Assembly 'Runs Out'

By the Associated Press.

Trenton, N. J., April 24.—New Jersey's ragged but militant band of unemployed, snubbed by the State Assembly which canceled a schedule relief session, determined today to continue besieging the Statehouse with "ever increasing numbers" until the Legislature votes relief funds.

A rebuke by a United States senatorial candidate, who told the unemployed they could find work if they looked for it and likened their occupation of the Assembly chamber to a "Gypsy camp," failed to shake their decision to hold the legislative chambers day and night until the Legislature acted.

Resentful because the Assembly's session, called hastily for 10 a. m. today, was just as hastily canceled almost at the meeting hour, the unemployed adopted a resolution charging the Assembly with taking a "runout powder," and said they would await with "improved morale the return of the sissy legislators."

The Legislature, which adjourned at 3:30 p. m. Tuesday—the hour the relief campers moved in—will reconvene Monday night. Legislative leaders met in Newark today to study relief legislation and hoped to whip some program in shape for action then.

The tattered, coatless, unshaven group of unemployed was halted today in the midst of its burlesque of the Legislature by Theron McCampbell, former Assemblyman and candidate for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator.

Walking briskly into the Assembly chamber at noon, McCampbell, who once called the Assembly an "insane asylum," mounted the rostrum and said he wanted to make a speech. Two Statehouse police-

Knox Requests Ban on Politics In Postal Jobs

Department's Spirit Nearly Wrecked, He Says, Urging Advance on Merit.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 24.—Col. Frank Knox, candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination, in a statement issued from his campaign headquarters here tonight, urged that the National Government "take the Postoffice out of politics."

His statement, addressed to President Roosevelt in response to a recent suggestion that critics of the New Deal be specific about what policies they would like to see changed, advocated that "all postmasters be selected from the ranks of the postal employes and earn their rank through civil service."

"Under Mr. Farley's benevolence," the communication continued, "the spirit of the Postoffice Department has been nearly wrecked.

"In 1933, a total of 3,390 Presidential postmasters were confirmed by the Senate. Out of 3,369 only 25 postal employes won advancement from the ranks. Nor was that all.

"There have been many instances, according to reports of the National Civil Service Reform League, when postmasters were ordered to resign before completion of their terms. Their jobs have been given to Mr. Farley's friends."

Cites Roosevelt Order.

The Illinois candidate asserted the President had aided Farley by an executive order July 13, 1933, giving the Postmaster General "authority thenceforth to 'disqualify any certified candidate at will.'

"That was a spoilsman's trick, Mr. President," Knox's statement continued. "If you did not know it at that time, then I believe it is fair to say that Mr. Farley did. I also believe it fair to say that the public did not know it because the words 'disqualify any certified candidate at will' were buried under a flood of other words."

Col. Knox asserted that present Administration policies have defeated the efforts of former Presidents of both parties to "remove the Postal Department from politics and to give postal employes opportunities for advancement on individual merit."

Replies to Borah.

New York, April 24 (AP).—Col. Frank Knox telegraphed Senator Borah today that he knew of no effort to persuade Republican Convention delegates from Illinois districts carried by the Idaho Senator to vote for Knox.

The Chicago publisher's message was in reply to a telegram from Borah declaring that such an effort was being made and asking if it had Knox's approval.

"You must be well aware," Col. Knox's reply said, "that almost every delegate chosen in Illinois primary publicly made known his personal intention if elected to vote for me.

"I know of no effort such as that referred to in your telegram and am sure you agree with me that the delegates will follow the dictates of their own consciences."

Student "Convention."

Evanston, Ill., April 24 (AP).—Former Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri, one of several speakers representing various shades of political belief before a mock "national convention" of Northwestern University students, assailed tonight what he termed the implied promises of the New Deal to restrict productive labor to those between the ages of 18 and 65.

"The President said nothing about where the money was to come from," said the Missouri Democrat, referring to the Baltimore address of President Roosevelt recently. Reed's remarks were in a speech prepared for delivery before the Northwstern students, gathered in bunting-draped Patten Gym.

The Republicans' cause was presented by Chauncey McCormick, of Chicago. The so-called "New Deal Democratic" faction of students had expected to hear Gov. A. B. Chandler of Kentucky as their speaker, but he sent word today that the press of legislative business prevented him from keeping his engagement, and Dean Clarence Manion, of Notre Dame University Law School, was invited to fill his place on the program. Prof. Marnard C. Krueger, of the University of Chicago, gave the Socialist speech.

Horatio J. Abbott Dies in Michigan

Ann Arbor, Mich., April 24 (AP).—Stricken with paralysis while he still was trying to settle a patronage row that had harassed his party for the last three years, Horatio J. Abbott, Democratic National committeeman, died in a hospital here today. He was 60 years old.

Abbott, long a leader of his party in Michigan, was rewarded for his fighting leadership by appointment in 1933 as collector of internal revenue at Detroit, but resigned within a few months when charges were made that campaign contributions were solicited from local industrialists by members of Abbott's staff.

The charges were the direct outgrowth of the patronage fight that involved Abbott and former Gov. William A. Comstock on the one hand and Democratic members of Congress from Michigan on the other.

Of chief interest in political quarters immediately following his death was its possible effect upon the party conflict. His successor will be named at the National convention in June. Among those mentioned for the post have been Representative Prentiss M. Brown, of St. Ignace, and George A. Burke, Ann Arbor lawyer, and life-long friend of Abbott.

Besides his widow, Abbott is survived by three adopted sons.

Borah Puts Knox on Spot by Illinois Support Query; Primary System Defects Revealed.

By Franklyn Waltman

SENATOR WILLIAM E. BORAH placed Col. Frank Knox on a hot spot by publicly asking him if he approved efforts of his friends to win the support at Cleveland of delegates elected in Illinois Congressional districts, where the Idahoan received a majority of the preferential vote.

WALTMAN

The colonel in reply evaded the question by asserting he knew of no such efforts. Yet at a press conference here last Saturday the Chicago publisher publicly claimed 48 of the 49 Illinois district delegates. He must have known then that Senator Borah received majorities in 11 of the Illinois districts, thus entitling him to the support of 22 of the district delegates.

Perhaps no overt efforts are being made by the Knox camp to win over to their standard bearer the delegates elected in districts carried by Senator Borah—perhaps these delegates prior to the primary election pledged themselves to Col. Knox. Still Senator Borah has a valid claim on their support and, although it might be asking too much in the way of gallantry, Col. Knox as a true believer in the democratic process should propose that these delegates vote for the Idahoan.

The Illinois situation aptly illustrates the defects of the primary system. When Senator Borah launched his campaign for the Presidency he contended that the rank and file Republicans should have an opportunity in primary elections to select their Presidential nominee and that he proposed to do his part by filing his name in some of the States.

But what does it mean after a primary is held? In the case of Illinois the preferential vote is not binding on the delegates elected—Senator Borah might carry a district overwhelmingly and yet the delegates selected can vote for whom they please. Similar laws exist in other States, reducing the primary system and all the talk about the "will of the people" to a farce. One of these days there will be a popular demand for a revision of ridiculous primary laws—and then a primary contest may mean something. It means little today, save in half a dozen States.

The failure of the Michigan State Republican convention to include Senator James Couzens among the delegates selected to represent the State at the Cleveland convention is without significance. Senator Couzens never has been a delegate to a national convention and long has expressed the view that officeholders should not participate in the nomination of candidates or otherwise seek to control elections.

It is true that the old old-deal Republicans in Michigan are not enamoured of the independent, hard-hitting Couzens and they were responsible for the selection as a delegate at large of former Gov. Wilber M. Brucker, who has declared himself a candidate for the Republican senatorial nomination.

Most political observers familiar with the Michigan situation, however, are convinced that Senator Couzens will have little trouble in beating Mr. Brucker and that all the odds favor his re-election in November. Indeed, there is evidence that the Democrats will not fight him very hard.

Senator Couzens is in the happy position of being wooed by wise leaders in both Democratic and Republican parties. There has been some talk of the Democrats indorsing Couzens in order to bolster President Roosevelt's prospects, but nothing will come of this.

Incidentally, word comes from reliable sources in Michigan that Democratic prospects are picking up in that State. The Democrats have been torn by dissension which has grown out of the handling of Federal patronage by the Roosevelt Administration. The Republican victory there in 1934, which included the re-election of Arthur H. Vandenberg, now indorsed by Michigan Republicans for the Presidential nomination, resulted chiefly from this patronage controversy, Democrats assert.

Patronage controversies are not insoluble. Jim Farley is an expert at patching them up. He has been confident that former Gov. William A. Comstock will not either bolt or take a walk from the Democratic Party and by this time Mr. Farley may have achieved working agreements with the Comstock Democrats in Michigan.

Senator Couzens, in a message to the Michigan convention, illustrated why the old guard Republicans do not particularly like him. He asserted that "we must all be Americans first and partisans afterward" and added that "the people are not interested in idle mouthings and platitudes." The latter is good advice for the Republicans nationally. Too many of their leaders still think the country will swallow the same old hooey.

The Republican National Committee, which has not been very astute in recent weeks, has scored a clever stroke in the publication of an eight-page rotogravure tabloid satirizing the New Deal. Entitled "On Our Way"—a Roosevelt ian phrase—it will be published twice a month until election day, or until the money gives out.

There are several chuckles in the first issue, which seems to indicate that the Republican high command still has common sense and a sense of humor left. In line with the new policy to center all attacks on President Roosevelt, the latter is given credit in captions for such things, graphically portrayed, as imports of foreign foodstuffs; the "half-baked potato program" and Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace with his "feet in the wastebasket—head in the clouds." There is a picture of a sea lion, beneath which a caption explains that "you'd know in a minute that this is not Mr. Roosevelt's Dr. Tugwell" because "this sea lion knows enough to come up for air" while Dr. Tugwell "remains perpetually submerged in his own dreams."

U. S. to Defend U-Boat Patent Breach Charge

Naval Officers to Testify in Claims Court on Use of Device.

By the Associated Press.

Recalling one of the World War's most dramatic phases, the Court of Claims yesterday prepared to hear a case against the United States Government charging infringement of a German inventor's patent on a vital submarine device.

Clyde A. Norton, patent commissioner of the court, scheduled hearings for May 18 at which Naval officers are expected to testify on the Navy's development and use of the device, designed to prevent leakage from a submarine's fuel tanks.

The charge of infringement and a demand for $250,000 compensation was filed by Otto Theodore Carpentier, of Chicago, assignee of the patent rights of Ferdinand Lantz, of Hamburg, Germany, who claims to be the original and sole inventor of the "valved controlling apparatus for outboard ballast and fuel tanks."

His invention is claimed to have solved one of the mysteries of German undersea warfare in the early days of the war. Many submarines sailed on belligerent voyages, it was explained, and never returned.

When the loss of U-boats brought about a critical situation, the German admiralty investigated and found that leaking oil spreading over the sea's surface, had disclosed the presence of the vessels to allied planes and destroyers. The latter promptly surrounded the spot and dropped depth bombs.

Lantz's invention, it is contended, made it impossible for the fuel tanks to leak, saved many submarines from destruction and made continued use of undersea craft possible as an efficient means of warfare.

Carpentier's petition alleges that Lantz filed his patent in Germany in January, 1917, but because America entered the war shortly afterward, he was unable to file his patent in this country until February 20, 1920.

An American patent was granted Lantz December 26, 1921.

The device has been installed, Carpentier alleges, on "a large number of submarines" by the American Navy without authorization and in violation of Lantz's patent rights.

announcement to President Roosevelt, except the statement that the President had received the board of directors of the league "and gave his indorsement to the principles of the organization."

Indeed, the only reference to the source of the announcement was that it came from the "Good Neighbor League, Munsey Building." A telephone number was given, however, which was that of Dr. High's office. A notice on the White House press board earlier in the day stated that Dr. High would have available a statement regarding the visit of the league directors.

Dr. High, who was an ardent prohibitionist—at one time he sponsored the idea of starting a national dry newspaper—a lecturer and a commentator for a radio broadcasting chain, was drafted in February by President Roosevelt to do "organization work" for the Democratic National Committee.

His appointment coincided with the disclosure by the Literary Digest that its poll of clergymen on whether they favored New Deal measures showed 70 per cent opposed. Since February Dr. High has been at work here, but not in the national committee's headquarters.

The announcement regarding the formation of the "Good Neighbor League" was the first public indication of the type of "organization work" being done by Dr. High. It is understood, however, that Dr. High had a hand in the interdenominational speech made on a Nation-wide broadcast by the President on February 23 in which he stressed "the good neighbor idea" in national as well as international affairs.

It also has been intimated in Democratic circles that Dr. High had a hand in the drafting of the appeal to the youth of the country made by President Roosevelt in Baltimore on April 13. Since the death of Louis McHenry Howe, there have been reports that Dr. High eventually may be added to the White House secretariat.

The announcement regarding the Good Neighbor League stated that "actual direction of the affairs of the organization will be in the hands" of the executive committee comprising Mr. Callahan, Mrs. Sternberger and Dr. High.

Callahan is a well-known Louisville varnish manufacturer who gained national prominence by his advocacy of national prohibition. During the 1924 Democratic convention he was an adviser to William Jennings Bryan in the latter's successful effort to prevent the nomination of Al Smith. Four years ago Callahan still opposed Smith's nomination for the Presidency.

In addition to Mrs. Sternberger and Mr. Callahan (Dr. High is not listed as a director), the directors of the league were given as follows:

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt.

Dr. James William Crabtree, headquarters representative of the World Federation of Educational Associations.

A. P. Giannini, chairman, Bank of America.

Miss Fannie Hurst, author.

Dr. John A. Lapp, former president of the National Conference of Social Work.

Rabbi Morris S. Lazaron.

Dr. Henry Goddard Leach, editor, The Forum magazine.

Thomas Neblett, president, National Student Federation of America.

Maj. Gen. John F. O'Ryan.

Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker, former president, General Federation of Women's Clubs.

Angus Roy Shannon, lawyer.

Dr. W. A. Sutton, superintendent of schools, Atlanta, Ga., and former president of the National Education Association.

The principles of the organization were stated as follows:

"The Good Neighbor League is a non-partisan association of those who believe that the principle of the good neighbor is an expression of the American ideal and should be made a fundamental policy of the American Government.

"The good neighbor recognizes that human values come before property values; that the long-time prosperity of property requires the long-time well-being of people; that the American answer to the revolutionist is the removal of those injustices which make revolution.

"The good neighbor believes that in America and for the world a better life for himself depends upon a better life for his neighbors.

"Through the Good Neighbor League the good neighbor pledges himself to work for the establishment of those convictions in his own, his national and his international neighborhood; to stand ready to oppose those policies, movements and persons in our country which threaten that principle, and to support those which are now seeking to advance it."

greatest possible measure of social security."

Senator Couzens sent a lengthy telegram to the convention. It was the first time since he has served as United States Senator that he has taken such heed of the party's State gatherings. He made no claims upon the convention; neither did he ask any favors.

"We must all be Americans first and partisans afterward," he wired. Pledging himself to work for measures "which will provide old-age and social security," Couzens said that "the people are not interested in idle mouthings and platitudes."

"I am not of the opinion," he continued, "that depressions are caused by politics, and, whether or not I am correct, it may be said with assurance that no political party is responsible for them."

Senator Vandenberg also telegraphed the gathering, expressing regret that he was obliged to miss his first convention in 30 years and adding: "Let's keep Michigan sane and America safe. All aboard for November."

Democratic Leaders Preparing for Rally

By the Associated Press.

Heading into a politically active week-end, the Democratic Party leaders last night converged on Philadelphia to lay the groundwork for the Democratic National Convention and prepared for a New York speech by President Roosevelt tonight.

Informed Democratic quarters here repeated last night that, barring the unexpected, the Philadelphia arrangements committee today would select Senator Barkley, of Kentucky, as the keynoter and Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, as permanent chairman.

Considerable speculation was stirred here as to the subject matter of the President's address, to be delivered before a gathering of the National Democratic Clubs. It will be one of Mr. Roosevelt's last speeches before opening of the party conventions in June.

Assembled before Mr. Roosevelt for the first time since his election will be the Tammany Hall leadership which fought his nomination four years ago. Present, also, will be many State and national party leaders.

Bothered by what his aids described as a slight head cold, the President remained away from his office yesterday and kept to the main part of the White House to prepare his speech.

Meanwhile, in one phase of Republican activity here, Senator Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, assailed an article in the "Democratic Digest" suggesting that a guillotine be erected in front of the new Supreme Court Building.

"Most Americans who love their institutions will demand an explanation and apology," Vandenberg said in a statement.

The Michigan Senator, who declared himself "highly complimented when his State Republican convention yesterday directed that his name be put before the Republican national convention as a candidate for the Presidential nomination, said later in the day he had "no comment" as to whether he would campaign for the nomination.

The article Vandenberg attacked appeared in the publication of the national committee's women's division. It said:

"The original guillotine which decapitated King Louis XVI, loyal friend of the American colonies when they needed a friend, was sold in France on St. Valentine's day for $167. With American liberties at stake it might not be inappropriate to buy that guillotine and set it up in front of the new judicial temple which frowns across the park that separates it from the Capitol."

"I do not know what particular implication is intended by this shocking political effrontery," Vandenberg said. "It is either a ghastly joke, or an ominous prospectus."

Charles Michelson, director of the Democratic National Committee's publicity section, professed it "just as difficult to understand what Senator Vandenberg means as what the ladies meant."

Mrs. James H. Wolfe, director of the women's division, said she didn't know what the article meant.

"I don't think there was an inferior motive, though," she added, saying that she would "look into it."

At Philadelphia today, the selection of other convention officers and work on the details that accumulate before any national party gathering will occupy the arrangements committee after it decides whom to recommend for the temporary and permanent chairmanships.

In Democratic circles here there was a general prediction that the committee's recommendations would be followed by the convention without a fight—unlike the situation in 1932, when the committee recommended Jouett Shouse for the permanent chairmanship, only to have Senator Walsh, of Montana, elected.

Senator Robinson, who has steered the Roosevelt legislative program through the Senate, was permanent chairman of the 1928 convention. Senator Barkley was keynoter at the 1932 convention.

Mr. Roosevelt will leave here this afternoon by special train for his New York speech.

White House aids indicated no concern over the President's cold, although careful attention was given to it.

Mr. Roosevelt will spend tonight in New York City at his home on Sixty-fifth street and motor tomorrow morning to the family residence at Hyde Park, N. Y., to spend several days before returning to the Capital.

Bill Sets Up $294,852 As War Mothers Fund

By the Associated Press.

Payment of $20,000 a year to the American War Mothers, Inc., by the Federal Government would be provided under a bill which was passed yesterday by the Senate and sent to the House.

The bill, introduced by Senator Minton (Democrat), Indiana, would direct the Treasury to set up an account of $294,852, representing the unexpended balance of money taken in from the sale of the Stars and Stripes, A. E. F. publication, during the World War. The bounty for the American War Mothers would be paid from the income of this fund.

Witnesses Tell Jury Reaguer Seemed Insane

Friend Reveals Undertaker Met Mrs. Wood After Her Marriage.

Allan Rosenthal, Culpeper merchant and sportsman, who often went fishing with William H. Reaguer, yesterday took the witness stand in Justice Oscar Luhring's Criminal Court and testified that, even after her marriage, Willie Mae Wood, slashed to death with a pen knife in the Houston Hotel October 12, visited the 57-year-old defendant in his undertaking establishment.

"I saw Mrs. Wood come out of Mr. Reaguer's place of business about 8 o'clock the morning of October 11," recalled Rosenthal under close questioning by Chief Defense Counsel James A. O'Shea.

This, O'Shea brought out a few moments later as he continued to elicit information from the stocky merchant, was the morning before she was found with Reaguer on the ninth floor of the hotel, almost decapitated.

"There were numerous other times I saw her leave his place," Rosenthal said, as Reaguer, on trial for first degree murder in the slaying of Mrs. Wood, but 17 days a bride at the time of her death, buried his head in his huge hands.

Rosenthal's testimony also concerned the last fishing trip he took with Reaguer in the autumn of 1935, a trip on which he described the actions of the 57-year-old embalmer as "not at all normal."

"The evening before we started the trip he seemed all upset," said Rosenthal.

"What do you mean by that?" inquired Assistant United States Attorney Irvin Goldstein on cross examination.

"He couldn't sleep. He became nauseated that evening."

"Had there been any drinking?"

"I don't drink myself," replied Rosenthal, "but Mr. Reaguer had a drink or so. I don't think that had anything to do with it, though."

On the trip, according to Rosenthal's testimony, Reaguer appeared utterly changed from the once enthusiastic sportsman of other days.

"I remember he stared at the water," Rosenthal recollected.

"Then, with the blue fish not biting much, two enormous bonitas swam close to our boat. The boys all grew excited. They tried to spear them, or to bait their hooks fast, so the bonitas wouldn't get away. But Beaguer paid no attention at all."

"Do you think that was a sign of insanity?" queried Goldstein.

"Well, sir, for a man as keen a fisherman as Reaguer, I'd say so."

O'Shea put Dr. Joseph L. Gilbert, chief psychiatrist at Gallinger Hospital, who examined Reaguer a few hours after the murder, on the stand late in the morning. Through his testimony, the defense attorney tried to show the condition of Reaguer's spinal fluid was found abnormal by the hospital test. O'Shea also tried to get Dr. Gilbert to say the spinal puncture was perforated to relieve pressure on the defendant's brain.

Routine Operation.

Denying this, the physician said the puncture was performed merely to secure material for the routine examination, and that the results revealed Reaguer was normal in this respect.

Capt. John L. Jeffries, World War veteran, Culpeper lawyer, who handled business for Reaguer and a friend of Reaguer's family, testified the undertaker showed a change after his visit to the University of Virginia Hospital in the late spring of 1932.

Numerous accounts were placed in his hands to collect for Reaguer, the lawyer recalled, and later he learned that Reaguer either had made other arrangements or collected on some of them himself.

"When we'd go to see Reaguer about this, the parties in debt would show the receipts that Reaguer had given them, and he would be apologetic and say he was sorry he had forgotten, and give them proper credit.

"I gave up his business because Mr. Reaguer didn't seem to be able to keep it straight. He just didn't seem to know which accounts were which any more."

"When did you decide Mr. Reaguer was insane?" asked O'Shea.

"Well, some time after that. Then he changed more and more when he lost his boy, Earl, two years ago."

Defendant Weeps.

At the mention of his dead son Reaguer wept, as he has whenever Earl's name has been brought into the testimony throughout the entire week of the trial.

The only other witness at yesterday's abbreviated session was Julian Brown, an automobile salesman and a friend of the defandant for more than 12 years.

"After Willie Mae got married I saw Reaguer in a drug store having a soft drink," said Brown.

"I told him it was too bad about Willie Mae, but he didn't seem to think so."

Reaguer, according to Brown's testimony, said on two occasions: "I'm glad she's off my neck. I'm glad to be rid of her and be left alone."

By arrangement, Justice Luhring adjourned the trial until Monday at 10 a. m.

MRS. ANNA SAGE,

"the woman in red," who led John Dillinger into Federal agents' death trap at Chicago, shown leaving for Rumania, her native country, after losing her fight against deportation proceedings.

Woman in Red, Calm, Prepares To Leave U. S.

Mrs. Sage Bears Ill Will to None, She Declares; Admits Mistake.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 24.—Her luggage packed for start of her forced departure from the United States tomorrow, Mrs. Anna Sage, "the woman in red," said today she held no ill will toward those she believes responsible for her deportation as an undesirable alien.

"I made my mistake and now I must pay for it," the Rumanian immigrant who led John Dillinger into a death trap set by police and Federal agents July 22, 1934, said in an interview today. The Government's action is based on Mrs. Sage's conviction in Gary, Ind., for operating disorderly houses.

After more than a year of legal efforts in Federal courts to evade the ouster she was under orders to board a Government train at the La Salle Street Station here by 3 p. m. (Eastern standard time) tomorrow. The train is scheduled to depart for the Eastern seaboard at 12:20 a. m. Sunday.

Blames Only Self.

"I blame only myself for my present difficulty," Mrs. Sage said. "The Government treated me fairly and I have no ill feeling toward that Government. I love this country and it grieves me to leave. It is my adopted country and the country of my son, Steve, who was born here.

"I hold no grudge against Melvin Purvis (former agent in charge of the Department of Justice offices here) but he should not have promised me immunity from deportation in return for my aid in trapping Dillinger when he had no authority to make such a promise.

Wanted to Stay in U. S.

"I did everything in my power to aid Purvis and his men in the Dillinger case. It is true that I received the $5,000 reward, but the reward that I sought most, permission to remain in this country with my son, was denied me.

"I hope that the Government within a few years will reconsider and allow me to return to this country which I have come to love so well."

Mrs. Sage said she would make her home in the little Rumanian farm town of Constanza. It was there her parents, now dead, had lived. A half-brother of Mrs. Sage resides at Constanza.

The deportation will part Mrs. Sage from her son, Steve, 23, and her husband, Alexander, a railroad worker, who will remain in the United States.

Physicians Fight Gangrene Threat to Scadding's Infected Feet.

By the Associated Press.

Halifax, Nova Scotia, April 24.—A Dominion government airplane was flying here tonight from Montreal with special medical equipment of Charles Alfred Scadding, one of the two survivors of ten days' imprisonment in an abandoned gold mine, who are patients in a hospital here.

The nature of the equipment was not disclosed, but Scadding, 44-year-old timekeeper, was suffering from a severe case of "trench feet." Physicians were striving to prevent aggravation of the infection, known as an incipient stage of gangrene.

Rosy cheeked and smiling, Dr. D. Edwin Robertson, 62-year-old Toronto surgeon, who was Scadding's companion during the nerve-wracking ordeal, was brought here by a Royal Air Force seaplane from the scene of the cave-in. He had rested overnight in a temporary hospital established at Moose River.

"How are you, Doc? How do you feel?" went up a chorus from shipyard workers when the plane was lifted to shore by a crane. The surgeon smiled acknowledgement.

An official statement issued this afternoon on Dr. Robertson's condition said:

"Dr. Robertson's general condition improved sufficiently during the night to allow his transfer to Halifax at noon today. He stood the trip well and is now resting comfortably in hospital. No complications have developed."

A bulletin admitted that the condition of Scadding's feet is "giving attending physicians considerable concern."

While Robertson and Scadding were receiving treatment, the body of their companion, Herman Magill, was en route to Toronto for burial. The Toronto attorney died in the mine early Monday. Magill was in Dr. Robertson's arms when he died and the surgeon was given much credit for aiding Scadding to keep alive.

DONALD McCARTHY.

Student's Body Found in River By Policemen

The body of Donald F. McCarthy, 24, missing Georgetown University medical student, was found floating in the Eastern Branch opposite the War College yesterday by Harbor police.

The youth, described by classmates as unusually bright, disappeared April 6, several days before he was to take an examination. Nervousness over the test was thought to be his reason for leaving his rooming house at 1419 Thirty-third street northwest.

McCarthy's automobile was found abandoned a day later near Hains Point. Tracks leading from the car ended at the sea wall. No returning tracks could be found by police who investigated the case.

Harbor police searched daily since the day of the student's disappearance, in an effort to recover his body. Yesterday the body was discovered floating in the channel by Policemen H. S. Carrico and C. R. Spring. A wallet containing a driver's permit and $1 was found in his pocket.

Police destroyed 1,700 circulars, bearing the youth's description and picture, which were about to be mailed throughout the country when Harbor police reported the discovery.

Edgar McCarthy, a brother of the dead youth, made a positive identification of Donald in the District Morgue. Edgar and his father, Dr. F. W. McCarthy, of North Bangor, N. Y., have been here since the young man disappeared.

Germany Holds French, Soviet Fears a 'Blind'

Talk of Menace to Czechs Is Assailed as Paving Way for Intervention.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, April 24.—The Deutsche Diplomatische Korrespondenz, mouthpiece of the German foreign office, said tonight Germany is threatened by French and Russian talk of a possible German attack against Czechoslovakia.

The statement was interpreted in diplomatic quarters as a cold warning to Czechoslovakia's two powerful allies to halt their reported discussions of what aid they could give that small state in case of attack.

The Deutsche Diplomatische Korrespondenz asserted that the French and Russian nervousness was a "blind" to create an occasion for military intervention in Germany.

The visits of Alexander Potemkin, Soviet ambassador to France, to French Foreign Minister Pierre-Etienne Flandin and Edouard Herriot, president of the Chamber of Deputies foreign affairs committee, caused a stir in German officialdom, while Russian, French and Czechoslovakian diplomats watched German arms developments.

Linked to Visits.

In diplomatic circles it was said that the trip of Andre Francois-Poncet, French ambassador to Germany, to confer with Flandin was connected with these fears, as were the visits of Austin Chamberlain, former British foreign secretary, to Vienna and Praha.

"The fiction of German danger," said the Korrespondenz, "has one motive—an attempt to create for the French another means of intervention, now that the marching-in ground in the west has fallen" (through the remilitarization of the Rhineland).

Germany celebrated "Colonial Memorial Day" today with speakers advancing arguments for return of the former possessions, but there were indications the Nazi government believes the present is not a propitious time to put forth its colonial demands vociferously.

The government apparently prefers to let colonial enthusiasts blow off steam in local meetings without making an open nation-wide campaign at present.

Speech at colonial meetings held in most German cities were not broadcast, although the colony question is close to the heart of most Germans.

Held "Move for Peace."

The problem of European cooperation can best be solved by the return of colonies, said Dr. Heinrich Schnee, former governor of German East Africa and president of the German Colonial Society, at Berlin exercises sponsored by the society.

"No action is better calculated to promote good relations and peaceful co-operation among European nations than by a return of colonies taken from us contrary to point 5 of President Wilson's 14 14 points," Schnee added.

(Point 5 said: "A free, open-minded and absolutely impartial adjustment of all colonial claims, based upon a strict observance of the principle that in determining all such questions of sovereignty the interests of the populations concerned must have equal weight with the equitable claims of the Government whose title is to be determined.")

"We believe for our over-populated country, with its dearth of raw materials, there can be no healthy future developed unless we again obtain colonial possessions."

Hitler Orders Amnesty.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Berlin, April 24.—Chancellor Adolf Hitler today ordered an amnesty for political prisoners, but it was emphasized that the order applies only to persons convicted of minor offenses.

Those benefiting from the order include Nazis who broke the law through excessive zeal in working for the party. Others benefited have been convicted of minor offenses, such as imprudent talking in beer halls, Catholic and Protestant clergy who preached anti-Nazi sermons will be liberated.

The decree provides that persons sentenced to less than six months for publicly defaming the government or party will be pardoned on condition that their offenses are not repeated for three years.

Nazis who broke the law through excessive zeal are pardoned unconditionally, regardless of the length of their sentences, unless they were convicted of crime for selfish motives or intentionally caused death.

Officials declined to estimate how many will benefit from the amnesty, which deals only with sentences imposed by ordinary courts.

It does not affect detentions made upon orders of Hitler's famed secret police.

Under the terms of the amnesty ordinary prisoners sentenced to less than one month will be freed along with large numbers of political offenders.

Sources close to the government said the amnesty was ordered because of "criminological considerations," especially the recent decrease in the number of criminal offenses.

British Scored For Aid in Stay Of Execution

Coast District Attorney Critical; Reprieve Comes as Men Await End.

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, April 24.—Bitter criticism of "British justice" was voiced tonight by an official after appeals of British authorities won a reprieve for Alexander Mackay as he waited for the signal to walk to the gallows. Both Joe Kristy and Mackay had been administered the last rites of the church when the life-saving news came.

Tonight as new moves were planned for the two kidnapers, District Attorney A. E. Bagshaw, of Marin County, who prosecuted them, said:

"Apparently Great Britain applies her principles of justice only when her citizenry is jeopardized by criminals and not when her subjects commit crimes in the United States.

"It is my personal belief that Great Britain's interceding was an insult to the Supreme Courts of this country."

30-Day Reprieve.

Less than an hour before the two were to drop through the trap in California's first hanging under the new State kidnaping law, Gov. Frank F. Merriam ordered a 30-day delay. It was the second reprieve he had granted them.

He took the action in response to the request of the British Government upon the urging of Secretary of State Hull.

Mackay and Kristy stared incredulously when the Rev. George A. O'Meara, a Catholic priest, told them of the reprieve.

"I don't know whether it's good or bad," said Mackay. "I was ready to go and I wish it had gone through."

Melvin Belli and Harding J. McGuire, attorneys for the condemned men, made plans for further legal moves.

The attorneys said editors of a London newspaper (Mirror) which telephoned the prison, agreed to present a defense fund appeal to the British press. Mackay is a British subject.

Slugged Warden.

Mackay, Kristy and two other convicts slugged the warden of San Quentin Prison and kidnaped five prison officials in an abortive escape attempt more than a year ago. Mackay and Kristy were sentenced to die under a new law providing death for kidnapers who injure their victims.

The British representations were made on the ground that the punishment appeared too severe for the crime.

In a statement to the press Gov. Merriam said:

"On the request of the Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State of the United States, and upon the urgent request of the British government in respect to Alexander Mackay and that the action filed in the California Supreme Court respecting Joseph Kristy may be heard and decided, I have granted both men a reprieve."

Father Jailed for Beating Boy, Then Putting Salt in Wounds

Xenia, Ohio, Youth, 15, Is Treated in Hospital for Injuries After Attempt to Steal Pigeons; Parent Admits Flogging, Is Fined $200.

By the Associated Press.

Xenia, Ohio, April 24.—A high school youth whose father admitted smearing salt on the youth's back after a beating, bore hospital treatment stoically today while the father started a six months' prison term for the offense.

The boy, Ammiel Bent, jr., 15, declined to talk of the beating inflicted as punishment for his attempted theft of pigeons from a neighbor. Physicians said he would recover unless the salted cuts on his battered body became infected.

Bent, a 39-year-old janitor, was sentenced yesterday in municipal court, the six months' term and a $200 fine being the maximum penalties of the old and almost forgotten torture law under which he was tried.

He admitted to Judge F. L. Johnson that he rubbed salt in the boy's open wounds in a deliberate effort to make them more painful.

Prosecutor Marcus McCallister declared Bent tied young Ammiel's hands Monday, suspended him on tiptoe by stretching the rope over a transom, and beat his bared back with a stick.

The occurrence, he said, was witnessed by the mother and others of the eight children in the family. The terrified woman told McCallister the father had beaten the children frequently, but that she feared to notify authorities.

Already under juvenile court parole for a previous pigeon theft attempt, the boy made no complaint after the whipping, but at school Tuesday his classmates noticed his condition and notified their teachers.

Bent said he came to Xenia from San Andres, Colombia, South America.

Court Voids Nixon Divorce

eral times. She sued him for a limited divorce in May, 1934, charging cruelty and intoxication. The following month she went into Police Court and charged that he assaulted her and threatened to have her killed in their home at 3500 Macomb street northwest. She said he dragged her by the hair around a room and told her he would import "some one from Chicago" to kill her.

The suit for divorce filed by Mrs. Nixon No. 2, came up for a hearing in the District Supreme Court last October after Nixon had obtained his Gettysburg divorce. On this occasion the former Boston woman filed an additional complaint naming Anne Cooke (by this time Mrs. Thomas Hay Nixon No. 3) as corespondent.

The immediate aftermath was a fist fight between W. Gwynn Gardiner, attorney for Mrs. Nixon, and Vincent A. Sheehy, attorney for Capt. Nixon.

Sister Given Decree.

The news from Gettysburg that Capt. Nixon's divorce from Wife No. 2 had been set aside followed by a day the granting of a limited divorce to Jane Cooke Scarlett, sister of Wife No. 3.

It was Anne Cooke who acted as "stage manager" when Jane, her younger sister, eloped with George Scarlett, the family chauffeur, in January, 1935.

She accompanied the newlyweds part way on their honeymoon and returned to Washington to defend young Scarlett against her mother's charges that he had stolen her jewelry before eloping.

Scarlett and his bride were almost killed when a locomotive struck their automobile in Georgia. Police identified Scarlett as a man for whom Montgomery County police had broadcast a lookout. They returned him to Rockville, where he was absolved of the charge of stealing Mrs. Cooke's jewelry.

Returning from the courthouse in triumph, Scarlett found that his bride had left him. Later she tried to have the marriage annuled. Failing in this, she sued for a divorce, charging cruelty.

Scarlett meantime filed a $100,000 damage suit against his bride's mother, accusing her of being responsible for his false arrest and the consequent damage to his reputation and well-being.

Scarlett was not in court the other day when a limited divorce was granted his wife.

The Bachelor King Sees How Guardsmen Live

London, April 24 (AP).—Great Britain's bachelor King paid a surprise visit today to the married quarters of the Coldstream Guards at Windsor.

Following a formal inspection of the First Battalion, His Majesty, in review order dress, expressed a wish to see the sergeants' mess and the married quarters.

In the sergeants' mess he found Mrs. Syrett, wife of Sergt. Maj. Syrett, preparing dinner. After apologizing for the "intrusion," the King chatted with Mrs. Syrett for some minutes.

"I shall be spoiling lunch if I stay longer," he said in bidding good-by.

2 Jailed for Assault On French Socialist

Paris, April 24 (AP).—Two men convicted of participating in the assault on Leon Blum, socialist leader, during a royalist parade last month were sentenced to prison today.

Leon Andurand, a chauffeur and member of the Royalist "King's Henchmen" group, was ordered to spend 15 days in jail. Louis Coutais, an insurance agent and also a henchman, was given three months.

Wendel Case

Wendel into admitting that he committed the Lindbergh murder—a confession Wendel repudiated as soon as he had a chance to confer with Attorney General David T. Wilentz, of New Jersey, in Trenton.

Parker is not the only one of the five men who still are fugitives. Police so far have been unable to find Murray Bleefeld and Weiss.

Weiss, according to Geoghan, was the one who pressed a pistol against Wendel's back when he left the hotel and forced him to get into the car. The district attorney said Murray Bleefeld informed Wendel that Trenton police wanted him and that Wendel got into the car thinking he was in the custody of New Jersey officers.

The only explanation of how all these men were persuaded to participate in this venture, according to Geoghan, was as follows:

"I am informed that Parker had David Bleefeld, brother of Murray and son of Harry Bleefeld, transferred from the Trenton State Prison to a much more pleasant institution, a State farm at Bordentown, N. J., and that there was hope that still greater favors might be shown to David Bleefeld."

House Clears Way For Board Setup

By the Associated Press.

The Rules Committee yesterday gave right of way in the House to a resolution for creation of a committee to investigate executive agencies of the Government, with a view to promoting co-ordination and eliminating overlapping activities. The resolution was introduced by Representative Bankhead (Democrat), of Alabama, the majority leader.

A similar Senate committee, headed by Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, already has started work.

President Roosevelt, in a letter to Speaker Byrns, had recommended creation of a House committee to work with the Senate group and a committee of experts he has named to study administrative management.

The House resolution would create a committee of five to study all activities of the departments, bureaus, boards, commissions and independent agencies, with a view to determining whether any agencies should be consolidated, abolished or their personnel reduced.

Civil Exams Slated.

Representative A. Willis Robertson said yesterday he had been informed the Civil Service Commission soon would hold examinations in 10 Virginia localities preliminary to stenographer and typist appointments, according to the Associated Press.

The examinations will be held at Abingdon, Charlottesville, Clifton Forge, Front Royal, Lynchburg, Newport News, Norfolk, Richmond, Roanoke and Staunton.

2 Navy Fliers Die In Crash on Coast

By the Associated Press.

Santa Monica, Calif., April 24.—Two men from the naval air base at San Diego, apparently confused by a high fog that overhung this area, were killed today in the crash of their plane against a boundary fence on the ranch of the late Will Rogers.

The victims were Lieut. Arthur Donovan Joseph Farrell, 32, the pilot, and William C. Kerr, aviation carpenter's mate, first class, of San Diego.

The plane caught fire. The site was on the rim of Rustic Canyon. The ship was one of two going from San Diego to Clover Field here on a test flight.

Lieut. Farrell went to Annapolis from New York. He came to the San Diego naval base recently from the naval aircraft factory at Philadelphia.

House Rejects Addition To Appropriations Bill

By the Associated Press.

The House disagreed yesterday to the $1,665,615 added by the Senate to the State, Justice, Commerce and Labor Departments appropriation bill and sent the $116,678,015 measure to conference.

Among the items added at the other end of the Capitol were $225,000 for the Bureau of Investigation, $136,000 for the Bureau of Labor Statistics, $275,000 for the Great Lakes Exposition, $390,000 for the Lighthouse Service to repair storm and ice damage, and $181,000 for the Air Commerce Bureau.

3 Still Control TownsendPlan, Inquiry Is Told

Doctor, Brother, Young Rule Over Directors, Clements Says.

By the Associated Press.

Testimony that three men still control the Townsend old-age pension organization and its assets despite a recent shake-up designed to "democratize" the movement was given yesterday to a House investigating committee.

Robert E. Clements, a co-founder of the movement, said Dr. F. E. Townsend, his brother, Walter Townsend, and Gilmour Young, who succeeded Clements as national secretary, control the Old Age Revolving Pensions, Ltd., corporate name of the Townsend organization.

The testimony came shortly before the special House committee recessed its hearings until May 5. Dr. Townsend has been ordered to appear at that time.

Membership Increased.

Questioning of Clements developed that after he resigned on April 1, Dr. Townsend and his brother, as the remaining members of the corporation, met and decided to increase the membership of the board of directors from three to nine.

Representative Hollister (Republican), Ohio, asked if the Townsends and Young "could, at any time, get rid of the new board of directors," and Clements replied in the affirmative.

Clements testified he was under the impresssion that when Walter Townsend resigned as a director in June, 1935, and was succeeded by Gomer Smith, that Walter Townsend also resigned as a member of the corporation, but learned later that he retained his membership.

Three Incorporators.

Under the original incorporation, the three incorporators—Dr. Townsend, his brother and Clements—were named members of the corporation. Smith, as a member of the board of directors and vice president, was not a "member" of the corporation.

"Since the board of directors are merely creatures of the members then Dr. Townsend, his brother and Young, in your place, hold the property interest in the organization, do they not?" asked Chairman Bell (Democrat), Missouri.

Clements said they did, and added that the meeting of Dr. Townsend and Walter Townsend, as "members" of the corporation, "came out of a clear sky to me because I thought Walter Townsend had severed all connection."

Women Refuse Agent of Black Access to Files

Head of Investors Group Withholds Records 'on Principal.'

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 24.—The Senate Lobby Committee met with its first refusal to furnish records by an organization from a woman's group, Women Investors in America, Inc., it was revealed today.

Miss Cathrine Curtis, president of the organization, said the committee had been refused permission to look into the records for evidence of lobbying activities "on principle."

"We are standing on our constitutional rights," she declared.

Hearing Postponed.

She also made public an exchange of telegrams and letters with Senator Hugo L. Black, committee chairman, in which it was revealed a committee session at which she was to be a witness was postponed from last Tuesday because of failure of the committee to obtain the records. She denied the session was postponed at her request.

Miss Curtis described her organization as "educational and protective, giving women instruction in the fundamentals of finance and investment."

"We are militantly pro-American in our ideals," she said.

"We do not consider we have done lobbying," she added. "Neither I nor any official member of our corporation receives salaries. The organization is not in the employ of anyone. Not a dollar contribution has been received with the proverbial string attached to it. No one can buy our patriotism."

"Nothing to Hide."

Declaring that "We have nothing to hide from the public," she added that had the organization not denied the committee access to its papers it would have "betrayed the sacred trust of sovereign rights."

In a letter from Jean Nelson Penfield, attorney for the organization, to Senator Black, was outlined the episode at which an investigator for the committee was denied access to the files.

The investigator, on April 17, called and asked to earmark such records as might relate to lobbying activities. In reply, Miss Curtis said she would have to consult with her board of directors. He served a subpoena for her appearance before the committee on April 21.

On April 18 he was informed that the inspection was denied. He then said it was his opinion the committee would not wish to proceed with the hearing scheduled April 21 without previous examination of the records.

Invited to "Try It."

He talked of serving an "instanter subpoena" under which he could take possession of the records, the Penfield letter said, but did not do so when invited to "try it."

The organization has its headquarters in New York. A pamphlet issued by it proclaims "We mobilize to save sovereignty, capitalism, investments, citizenship, ideals."

It proclaims itself nonpartisan, nonprofit making and nonsectarian, and points to mass spending by women as the reason for its campaign "by which women may be aroused to a realization for the stake they hold in the Nation's wealth and prosperity * * *."

men who rushed to his side tried to stop him, but McCampbell said he had the right to speak, and would.

While the unemployed listened in silence and awe, McCampbell spoke:

"I'm angry at what you're doing," he said. "You are going about this thing in the wrong way. Economically you are children. What you are doing is asking for more taxes. We have too much taxes now. They are the cause of our trouble. Taxes and the cost of government must be reduced.

"You can find work. Go out and look for it and you can find it. Not a single man need go without work. Appeal to the Legislature to pass laws to give you work, not money. Ask them to repeal the high tax laws and that will revive the building industry and every other industry."

Unpopularity of a 2 per cent sales tax recommended by Gov. Harold G. Hoffman a year ago resulted in its repeal after four months' operation. Failure of the Legislature to agree on a substitute forced the present crisis.

Utilities Close 'Specific' Part Of PWA Suits

General Testimony in Action to Halt Power Loans Set for April 29.

By the Associated Press.

Public utilities contesting the constitutionality of PWA power projects concluded the presentation of specific testimony yesterday in the District of Columbia Supreme Court.

Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat, presiding, set April 29 as the date for starting general testimony on behalf of the Alabama Power Company, Texas Utilities, the Iowa City Light & Power Co. and the Oklahoma Utilities Co.

For four days an uninterrupted line of witnesses appeared for the four concerns in five consolidated suits seeking a permanent injunction against Secretary Ickes and Treasury disbursing agencies to prevent their advancing approximately $3,000,000 for municipal power systems.

They testified to specific features involved in PWA loans and grants to Florence, Decatur, Sheffield, Tuscumbia, Russellville, Guntersville and Hartselle, in Alabama; Iowa City, Iowa; Plainview, Tex., and Hominy, Okla. The witnesses were examined by attorneys for the individual companies.

General counsel for the utilities will direct presentation of evidence next week. The staff is headed by Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War during the Wilson Administration, and Dean G. Acheson, former New Deal Undersecretary of the Treasury.

Acheson said the testimony will deal with the broad phases of PWA power projects as they affect issues common to all four litigants.

He expected to renew efforts to place in the record two items of confidential communieation between President Roosevelt and Secretary Ickes to relate to the Administration's national power policies.

One was described as a letter written to the President by Ickes on September 8, 1934, concerning certain allocations of PWA funds and the other, presumably in reply, was said to be a message to Ickes from Hyde Park, N. Y., dated September 10, 1934, initialed "F. D. R." in pencil.

Morley Brands Neutrality Act As Unworkable

Post Editor Says Combined Efforts of Peace Groups Can't Avert War.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, April 24.—Felix Morley, editor of The Washington Post, tonight cited an absence of a realistic approach to the problem of maintaining peace, and declared the united efforts of peace societies, on an emotional basis, was not enough to keep the Nation out of war.

In his speech for delivery before the American Academy of Political and Social Science, Mr. Morley said besides the "obvious shortcomings of our neutrality policy, we know in our hearts that it is unworkable. That is the explanation of the paradox whereby the same session of Congress, which extends the neutrality law at the same time increases military appropriations to a figure which a quarter of a century ago was the sum total of our governmental expenditures.

"Unwilling to take any realistic step to avert war, we talk peace and steadily develop a policy of 'macht politik' which can only end in our participation in the next world war, regardless of the 'greatest united effort' of the peace societies."

Mr. Morley described the whole content of neutrality thinking as "deceptive," and in addition "it is definitely menacing to all the constructive work of the post-war period in the field of international relations.

"One of the greatest triumphs of the Geneva system has been its demonstrations, in the case of Italy, that sanctions against a great power aggressor are definitely practical; that effective, economic and financial pressure can be exerted against a nation juridically defined as an aggressor without any serious risk of war. Our neutrality policy is calculated to destroy this invaluable achievement. Insistence on trade with the aggressor undermines the system of sanctions of nonintercourse and therefore makes a naval blockade of an aggressor, which is a definite act of war, the only practical alternative to the collapse of the system which we now see occurring."

Dentists to Give Free Services On Health Day

As features of Child Health Day, May 1, 200 local dentists will give free examinations to children, and the Department of Playgrounds will open its annual Civic Standards Campaign.

Dr. Hugh J. Davis, director of child health and welfare and chairman of the local May Day Health Committee, announced yesterday that children will be treated on a schedule of appointments arranged through the Health Department.

The advisory committee on Playground Civic Standards is planning an energetic campaign to prevent accidents on and near playgrounds. It has obtained the co-operation of the Civics committee of the Women's City Club which each year presents certificates to playgrounds maintaining high standards of order and safety.

The May Day health program will be launched with a radio broadcast in which District and Medical Society officials will discuss ways in which the new social security laws benefit local children.

The committee in charge of Child Health Day is also planning health talks in the high schools and a recreational program for public school children on the city playgrounds. The day will be further marked by a dinner meeting of the Social Hygiene Society.

Jurors to Be Called In Flogging Trial

Bartow, Fla., April 24 (U.P.).—Attorneys defending seven former policemen charged in the Tampa flogging case today won a partial victory in a legal maneuver to impeach testimony of key State witnesses.

Battering at the stories of blood and violence told from the witness stand this week by Sam J. Rogers and Eugene F. Poulnot, two of the victims, Defense Counsel Pat Whitaker won the right to call members of a former grand jury in an attempt to bring out contradictions in their testimony.

Judge Robert T. Dewell granted him this right late today, but ruled against a similar motion which would have permitted the defense to introduce a transcript of the Rogers-Poulnot testimony before the grand jury which returned original indictments in the case.

The sudden defense attack on the State's case interrupted the dramatic reconstruction of the attack in a Tampa woodlot last Nov. 30 when Rogers, Poulnot and Joseph Shoemaker, kidnaped from the door of the police station, were whipped into semi-consciousness.

Seven former Tampa policemen, headed by former Police Chief Richard G. Tittsworth, who is named as an accessory, are charged with conspiracy, kidnaping and false arrest in the case.

Stolen Photograph Blamed in Slaying

San Jose, Calif., April 24 (AP).—Peter Voiss, accused as the highway killer of Dr. Jasper Gattuccio, 32, told officers today the dentist made him "mad" three weeks ago by trying to photograph him without paying him for it.

Since then, the elderly eccentric burro driver told Deputy Sheriff Jack Lerner, he has carried penciled in his coat the automobile license number of Gattuccio, shot yesterday after taking the long-sought picture.

"I make my living allowing my picture to be taken," said Voiss, who wanders over California highways in his rickety covered wagon.

"Yesterday, I saw the car corresponding to the number in my coat."

Dr. E. W. Mullen, superintendent of the Agnew State Hospital, said the 72-year-old wanderer was "unbalanced."

Soldier Kills Girl And Wife With Ax

Fayetteville, N. C., April 24 (AP).—Grover Pritchette, 44-year-old Fort Bragg private, was held in jail here tonight after hacking Miss Ruth Fuquay, 18, of Coats, to death with an axe and fatally wounding his wife with the same weapon.

Pritchette later attempted to slash himself to death with a razor blade, but his wounds were not serious, and after they were treated at the Fort Bragg post hospital he was taken to the county jail here.

Sheriff N. H. McGeachy said he found a small piece of brown blood-stained paper at the Pritchette home, near the Fort Bragg Army reservation, on which Pritchette told of attacking the women "because my wife had not been treating me right." The note, the sheriff said, was addressed to his father, H. G. Pritchette, of Almanance County, and instructed him to "collect my money from the Government."

Miss Fuquay was dead when officers arrived on the scene. Mrs. Pritchette, however, lived several hours, dying in a hospital.

Mrs. Haig, Miss Chenoweth Named D. C. Regents; Student Reds Scored.

The forty-fifth Continental Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution closed last night with a banquet at the Hotel Mayflower attended by more than 1,100 delegates.

Officially, the congress adjourned in the afternoon following the installation of the newly elected vice presidents general and State regents and vice regents. Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig and Lillian Chenoweth were confirmed as State regent and vice regent of the District of Columbia Chapter.

A resolution attacking the American Student Union, radical pacifist group, as a "Communist-controlled youth movement" and an address on "The Registration of Aliens" by Senator Robert Reynolds, of North Carolina, featured the morning session.

Emphasizing the "danger of alien influences subverting the ideals of the founding fathers," Senator Reynolds urged a more restrictive and selective immigration policy, the compulsory registration and fingerprinting of all aliens in this country, the extension of quotas to North and South American countries and the wholesale deportation of illegal entrants and alien criminals.

"Unless we adopt such measures, America will go communistic within 25 years," he warned.

Reynolds praised the recent action of the Governor of Colorado in calling out the State militia to keep aliens and vagrants from entering the State, and urged similar moves by other State governments.

Stressing what he termed the "biological" interpretation of the immigration problem, Reynolds asserted that "the adoption of a national policy and genuinely selective immigration is so imperative as to call for immediate and intelligent action."

"As the blood of a nation determines its history, determines its growth and progress, or its degeneration and end," he continued, "let us therefore ask ourselves, What quality of stock is America producing? We cannot undo the past, but we can guard the future of America. We want no more dumping of undesirables upon us. We want to prevent multiplication of unfit families.

"There are millions of aliens in America usurping American jobs," he charged. "With between 6,000,000 and 7,000,000 aliens already in the country, either holding jobs that otherwise would be filled by American citizens out of employment though self-supporting, or who are on relief rolls, it is no time to abandon wise and strong immigration restriction.

"Since the depression in 1929 more than $250,000,000 has been sent by these aliens to their relatives in foreign countries. More than $11,000,000 is flowing abroad yearly from the Treasury to compensate disabled veterans who remained abroad after the World War, or in pensions to their dependents. It is estimated that Uncle Sam spends $50,000,000 a year for medical attention to aliens and $25,000,000 in the education of children of aliens.

"I propose that Federal Government register and fingerprint every alien upon his arrival in this country and issue to him an identification card, which will establish his right to be here. I would provide for an annual census of these aliens, so that we might offer to those legally here every opportunity to learn what America means, what its traditions are, and what life in America has to offer them."

The recommendations made by Senator Reynolds have already been introduced into Congress in a bill drawn up jointly by him and Representative Joe Starnes, of Alabama, as a substitute for the Kerr-Coolidge bill. The Starnes-Reynolds bill has been indorsed by the D. A. R.

The resolution on the American Student Union adopted by the D. A. R. described the union as "part of the Communist-controlled youth movement, the most insidious and well-directed unit in the united front attack against the ideals and principles upon which this American form of government is established."

Urging opposition to the Student Union, the resolution pledged D. A. R. support to the Student Americaneers and the Practical Pacifists, two student groups "whose purpose is to expose and counteract subversive activities and foster true Americanism on the campus." At the symposium on national defense on Monday representatives of these two groups addressed the D. A. R.

An invitation from the National Park Service to sponsor Moore House, Yorktown, as a national shrine, to the extent of furnishing the room where Cornwallis signed the articles of surrender, was approved by the Congress, as was a resolution that a memorial tablet be placed in Constitution Hall in honor of Mrs. Anthony Wayne Cook, honorary president general, under whose administration the building of the hall was authorized.

An improvement in the quality of motion pictures was noted by Mrs. Leon A. McIntire, chairman of the "better films" committee. She urged the members to press for the inclusion of a course in photoplay appreciation in the high school curriculum in every State. Eighteen States now offer such courses, she said.

Walsh Assails Move to Check Supreme Court

Compulsory atheism and military dictatorship could follow proposed Congressional control of the Supreme Court, the Rev. Edmund A. Walsh S. J., vice president of Georgetown University, warned last night.

"If Congress may decide how and in what manner the court shall vote," he said in his last lecture of this year's course on Christianity, Communism and Democracy, "by declaring what constitutes a majority for the judiciary—if by simply voting twice what it should never have voted once it can achieve supreme authority—there is no legal obstacle to eventual abolition of the entire Bill of Rights.

"It would have the power, through a bare majority, to abolish freedom of religion and establish either a state church or compulsory atheism; it would be legally competent to destroy freedom of speech, of the press and of petition.

"It could abolish the State militia and quarter Federal troops in every village, hamlet and private house. It could invade your domicile in unreasonable search without warrant or probable cause, impound or confiscate private papers at will and deny your inalienable right to the most inviolable domestic privacy.

Zioncheck Cited.

"It could do in all walks of life what a Senate committee has already done in one field and what a member of the House has done in another—careening madly through the public highways at the wheel of a deadly weapon, hurling defiance at the courts and bidding judges to go to hell.

"It could abolish trial by jury, define as treason any act contradictory to the whim of the party temporarily in control of the legislature, and deprive selected victims of life, liberty and property without due process.

"In a word, Congress could legally become an uncontrolled and humanly uncontrollable dictator."

Father Walsh stoutly defended the Supreme Court's legal right to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional, saying that it was implied in the Constitution's limitation of every power save that of the court.

He denied that the court was either "behind the times or obstructing the march of progress." In answer to the "impatient Hotspurs" who would limit the court's authority in times of emergency, he said:

"That is precisely the hour of vigilance; that is the moment for the rule by law, for it is then that passion obscures vision and party interest most prevails."

Instead of the "multiplication of new breeding plots of confusion and bureaucracy," he suggested that the Administration would find adequate means of dealing with emergencies through existing Federal agencies and through the powers of the States.

Recalls Jefferson.

He recalled the words of Thomas Jefferson, who said:

"A single consolidated government would become the most corrupt government on earth . . . What has destroyed the liberty and the rights of man in every government which has ever existed under the sun? The generalizing and concentrating all cares and powers into one body!"

Father Walsh said it was no answer that the eventualities of dictatorship would never happen in America. He concluded:

"Where is the divine guarantee? Where is the human assurance except in the soothing assumption that the frail mortals entrusted with such momentous potentialities will never abuse their affirmative powers?

"That is to ask us to accept an empty scabbard in exchange for the cold steel of independent judicial review that has safeguarded fundamental liberties since 1789. That would be to ask Americans to exercise their natural rights by grace of Congress, and by grant of a revocable hypothesis, not by right of an indefeasible inheritance.

"That would be to voluntarily consent to a dangerous adventure which could lead unchecked and legally to the extinction of our reserved rights, to the twilight of the sovereign States, and to the suicide of democracy."

$2,300,000 Oil Fortune Is Left To Aid of Needy

A. H. Gibson's Will Directs Half Be Used to Give Medical Help.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, April 24.—A fortune of more than $2,300,000 earned by Addison H. Gibson, a farm boy who struggled through poverty to wealth and success in the oil industry, goes to the poor and needy under the terms of his will.

Gibson was born 75 years ago, the son of a storekeeper at Elderton, Pa.

He died a week ago in Tulsa, Okla., a millionaire and the head of a half-dozen oil companies.

Today his will was filed for probate. It stipulated the bulk of his estate should be used to procure medical aid for the impoverished sick and to help deserving young men obtain a college education.

Gibson directed the estate be set up as a trust fund to be known as the Addison H. Gibson Foundation. He designated trustees to carry out his wishes.

$190,000 for Kin, Friends.

The oil man, a bachelor, set aside approximately $190,000 for relatives and friends. All the remainder of the estate, valued at $2,500,000, goes to charity.

Regarding the administration, Gibson wrote:

"I desire and direct that the income from one-half of said trust shall be used, as my trustees shall see fit, to procure medical aid or hospital facilities for poor and needy persons. It is my primary desire that such assistance be given directly to such persons, but I do not forbid said trustees from donating said income directly to such hospitals or other institutions furnishing such aid as they shall select and designate."

He expressed preference the money should benefit persons residing in western Pennsylvania, but added:

Loans for Education.

Of the other half of the trust, he stipulated:

"I want them (the trustees) to make loans to worthy young men desiring to obtain a college education but without sufficient funds or resources to do so. I want them to select the individuals to be given this assistance."

Gibson also wrote: "I have throughout my lifetime been impressed by the misfortune of persons in dire need of medical and hospital assistance but unable to obtain the same because of poverty or limited means, and also by the fact that worthy children of parents who are poor or of limited means cannot obtain the higher education which they crave and which, if they could obtain, might greatly increase their happiness and their usefulness and emciency."

Ball Player's Wife Perishes in Blaze

Fort Worth, Tex., April 24 (AP).—Puzzling angles confronted police tonight in their effort to explain the death of a baseball player's wife, whose nude body was found in her fire-swept apartment a few hours after she was pursued in an automobile.

Neighbors advanced a foul-play theory. Fire department officials believed a gas explosion caused the fire but they could find no proof.

The woman, Mrs. Charley Engle, wife of the shortstop on the Fort Worth Texas League team, died in a hospital soon after a fireman stumbled over her body as he entered the duplex apartment.

Joe Goodwin, assistant fire marshal, said indications were that she struggled vainly to escape the fire trap.

Mrs. Al Shealey, wife of a Fort Worth pitcher, said she and Mrs. Engle, while returning home from a visit last night, had to drive around a block to shake off pursuers in another car.

Illinois Court Upholds 2-Year Alimony Law

Springfield, Ill., April 24 (AP).—The Graham act, effective last July, terminating alimony payments at the end of two years for childless women, was held constitutional today by the Illinois Supreme Court.

Maud G. De Motte appealed unsuccessfully from a Cook County (Chicago) decision permitting William C. De Motte to stop alimony payment at the end of two years. The court also upheld the section of the law classifying two years of separate maintenance as desertion, making it grounds for divorce in Illinois.

Idahoan Wants to Buy Brunswick Rooster

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Brunswick, Md., April 24.—Reed Thompson has an offer for the sale of his fighting rooster from Pocatello, Idaho.

Reed's rooster recently gained Nation wide fame by tearing a hole in a lady's silk stocking. Reed was assessed $1 for a pair of hosiery, a $1 medical fee and the court costs when arraigned before Magistrate William H. Campbell.

A resident of Pocatello writes that he wants to buy the rooster, "if he is as good as they say he is," to present to a Pocatello magistrate, whom the correspondent claims engaged him in a pinochle game while officers tagged his car for overtime parking in Pocatello.

Court Rejects Verdict Against Newspapermen

By the Associated Press.

Pierre, S. Dak., April 24.—Holding the "need for a free and unfettered press is perhaps more urgent in this country today than it ever has been before," the State Supreme Court today overturned the conviction of two Aberdeen newspapermen on contempt of court charges resulting from editorial criticism of a circuit court judge.

While it reversed the lower court in the 4-year-old case, the supreme court held contempt proceedings were "proper and entirely justifiable" with sufficient authority to sustain "conclusions and judgment." It concluded, however, the reversal would "best promote the public welfare."

The case attracted wide attention. It began when the Aberdeen American and News published editorials in February, 1932, criticizing Judge Howard Babcock, of Sisseton, for what they termed leniency in sentence concerning alleged graft in Brown County. Defendants were the newspaper, the late J. A. Mathews, then publisher, and Howard O. Anderson, editor.

Circuit Judge J. H. Bottum, of Faulkton, presiding in the contempt proceedings, fined the American and News, Mathews and Anderson $200 each and sentenced the two men to 30 days each in jail. He suspended the jail sentences, however, on condition "you do not publish in the future articles of condemnation or contempt of court."

In appealing the case, attorneys for the newspapermen attacked the sentences as violating constitutional guarantees of freedom of the press. They also charged that the condition on which the jail sentences were suspended amounted to censorship.

The Talent And The Times.

Does the writer create the mood of his era, or does the era direct the writer's pen? Were certain types of literature dictated by medieval gaiety, Victorian naivete, post-war reaction? Or were those types propaganda which shaped their epochs? This is one of many interesting speculations raised by the Shakespeare birthday address of Dr. Felix E. Schelling at the Folger Library.

Specifically, however, Dr. Schelling said that, had the greatest of the Elizabethans lived in Chaucer's day, "Hamlet" would have been a narrative poem—that, had Shakespeare flourished among the Victorians, his prose fiction, "uplifted with the quintessence of poetry," would have exceeded any novel by Dickens, Thackeray or the Brontes. Such a contention is simply another way of saying that the times shape the vehicle of an author's expression. It leaves untouched the questions of what spiritual merchandise he puts into his wagon, with what intellectual force he drives it—and whether, indeed, he hitches it to a star.

And that, we take it, is the extent of Dr. Schelling's argument. A man of his intuitive critical capacity, not to mention his profound scholarship, would scarcely force his thesis to the point of alleging that environment can always overcome personality, that circumstance is always stronger than mind. The problem is one of individuals, of degrees of greatness. Talent is pliable; but the authentic genius, by whatever literary form comes readist to his hand, shapes both himself and his world.

Funds For The G-Men.

Senator McKellar's attempt to deny the Federal Bureau of Investigation funds to hire 175 more agents resulted in an emphatic vote of confidence for the G-men. Democrats and Republicans alike joined in the debate against the McKellar amendment and finally shouted down his proposal to cut $225,000 from the sum voted for this bureau by the House. Legislators who are pressing most energetically for economy measures lined up in favor of this expenditure.

In the opinion of Senator Robinson, the Democratic leader, there is doubt whether "anything has ever been done more splendidly, more irresistibly, than the drive" of the G-men against gangsters. Senator Vandenberg, who has assumed leadership of the Republican forces in the Senate, was equally positive in his statement that "the people generally have come to possess such a surpassing confidence in the so-called G-men."

Such lavish praise from both political camps is a high compliment to J. Edgar Hoover's crime-fighting organization. Yet it needs no encomiums. The record of the F. B. I. alone justifies the most thoughtful consideration of its requests for men and equipment. Since June, 1932, there have been 52 major kidnaping cases in the United States. It is claimed that in every instance the G-men have ascertained the identity of the kidnapers, and 136 of the felons involved have been convicted. The virtual disappearance of this crime in recent months can be attributed in large part to the excellent work of the F. B. I.

To anyone familiar with the problem of organized crime, however, breaking up the kidnap racket is only a good beginning. Mr. Hoover told the D. A. R. yesterday that 150,000 murderers are at large in this country. Unless conditions can be improved, he calculates that more than 300,000 persons now living will be brutally slain. Yet this is only one department of the crime problem. When assault, robbery and fraud are added to this record of homicides, organized crime is seen to be one of the chief responsibilities of our Government.

Not all the responsibility for combating this menace falls upon the G-men. But they are certainly the vanguard. Mr. Hoover is pointing the way toward a new technique in fighting crime. Not only has he trained a highly competent organization of his own; he has also laid the groundwork for instruction of local officers and co-ordination of all police work through the identification service centering in Washington.

To interrupt this progress in law enforcement by withholding funds for 175 additional men, when the Federal pay roll is weighted down by thousands of employes engaged in undertakings of questionable social value, would be the acme of stupidity.

The Puerto Rico Bill.

The Administration's surprise move to offer independence to Puerto Rico was prompted by a variety of circumstances. Unrest in the island during the last few years has undoubtedly stimulated a desire within the people to control their own government. It has become increasingly apparent that some adjustment of the island's political status is desirable. Moreover, the Administration is eager to eliminate every vestige of friction between the United States and Latin-American peoples before the forthcoming Pan-American conference is convened.

In Puerto Rico opinion is divided as to the desirability of independence. One influential party favors statehood in the American Union. Indeed, the insular Legislature passed a resolution appealing for statehood a year and a half ago. Another substantial group, the Liberty Party, is committed to independence, although its leader, Luis Munoz-Marin, hastily voiced his opposition to the Tydings bill. This group should not be confused with the relatively small Nationalist Party, which seeks independence by terrorist methods.

Because of this divided opinion and the suddenness with which the independence measure has been thrust into Congress, the Puerto Rican people are likely to be bewildered by it. As was the case in the Philippines for many years, independence has been regarded as an ideal status not within immediate reach of the people. Now it has suddenly become a practical issue. No longer can it be considered in vague terms of theory. The people will now want to know how it will affect the economic status of the islands. Will it promote or retard social reform? Instead of associating independence in some vague way with solution of all their problems, the thinking men and women of Puerto Rico must now analyze its probable consequences from the bread-and-butter viewpoint as well as the high pinnacle of principle.

The Filipino independence movement developed over a long period. Virtually all the people were committed to it before there was any opportunity of knowing what the probable effects of the separation would be. In Puerto Rico the situation is somewhat different. The active demand for a national status is of more recent origin. Consequently, the people may be in a better position to view it realistically. Since many citizens of the new Philippine Commonwealth already question the wisdom of their experiment, it is quite possible that the independence movement will lose rather than gain favor in Puerto Rico with the advance of the Tydings bill in Congress.

In so far as this measure will induce the Puerto Ricans to review their demands in the cold light of reality it will serve a useful purpose. Great care ought to be taken, however, to make the bill itself reasonable and fair. For if it is to serve as a test of Puerto Rican sentiment for independence, the wishes of the separatists cannot be lightly ignored. Hearings on the bill may develop that these groups are seeking something less than complete independence. If so, the task will be to devise a measure that will be satisfactory at both Washington and San Juan.

In the meantime, this offer to let Puerto Rico manage her own affairs gives further impetus to President Roosevelt's efforts to promote good will and insure peace among the nations of the Western Hemisphere. With this co-operative attitude prevailing, it should not be difficult to work out some more satisfactory status for Puerto Rico, whether or not the Tydings bill is enacted by Congress and approved by the islanders.

What Should Be Done?

Within two and one-half years, Robert E. Clements told the House committee investigating pension movements, he received $57,500 from dividends and sales of stock in the Townsend "Weekly," without the investment of a cent. Adding his salary and living expense allowances as an official of Old Age Revolving Pensions, Ltd., his total receipts amounted to nearly $78,000. Mr. Clements has done extremely well for himself, although his returns are small, compared with the tribute levied upon the public by some of our leading criminal racketeers and shady promoters of unsound business enterprises.

However, when racketeers with criminal records are run to earth by police and detectives, we have laws that enable us to deal with them. We also think that we have found a way to protect investors against the activities of fraudulent company promoters by passing laws regulating the flotation of securities and trading on the stock exchanges. But the revelations of the Townsend inquiry have shown the hopeless inadequacy of our defenses against charlatans who operate within the law and may, indeed, believe in the absurdities that they preach to credulous multitudes.

Protection against unscrupulous promoters of the type of Dr. Townsend and his colleagues presents a very difficult problem because there is no clear line of distinction between permissible solicitation of funds and taking money under false pretenses or with intention to defraud. A man cannot be punished if he is paid to paint word pictures of utopia for underfed audiences. Shall he be punished for publishing and selling literature that enables people to dream dreams of an old age of idleness and plenty?

Outraged public opinion concludes that something should be done to prevent commercialized exploitation of human credulity, but the method of procedure is undetermined. The House Committee of Inquiry could spend time profitably considering this matter instead of piling up superfluous evidence showing the need for action.

The Control Of Munitions.

Abuses that have crept into the munitions industry were effectively exposed by the report of the Nye committee this week. The unanimous findings of the committee's seven members very definitely lead to the conclusion that the manufacture of war materials should be brought under control. The weakness of the report comes from the committee's division of opinion as to how that control can best be effected.

Some of the methods used to sell instruments of war in foreign countries would be disgraceful in any business. American companies, like those of other countries, have indulged in bribery, in "actively" obstructing peace efforts and in the promotion of war spirit by playing one country off against another. When the merchandise disposed of by these methods consists of instruments of death, the urgency of corrective measures is immediately apparent.

The findings of the Munitions Committee are much less sensational than some of the hearings it conducted. It found no evidence "that wars have been started solely because of the activities of munition makers and their agents," although it points out that "wars rarely have one single cause." No disinterested citizen is likely to dispute the committee's assertion that it is "against the peace of the world for selfishly interested organizations to be left free to goad and frighten nations into military activity."

In making that statement, however, the committee seems to ignore the work now being done by the Office of Arms and Munitions Control in the Department of State. Under a recent act of Congress, largely prompted by the work of the Nye committee, this agency registers the manufacturers, exporters and importers of munitions and issues a license for every shipment of arms and instruments of war in international commerce. Many of the abuses of which the committee complains should be eliminated by this new system of control. Certainly it is far-fetched to assume that Government operation of munitions plants is essential to eliminate insidious pressure upon weak foreign governments, before this important step toward successful regulation has been given a fair trial.

Former President Wilson failed to convince the powers represented at the peace conference that the private manufacture of munitions should be abolished altogether. But members of the League of Nations did "agree that the manufacture by private enterprise of munitions and implements of war is open to grave objections." And the Council was instructed to "advise how the evil effects attendant upon such manufacture can be prevented, due regard being had to the necessities of those members of the League which are not able to manufacture the munitions and implements of war necessary to their safety." Studies made under this mandate do not find socialization of munition plants to be a panacea.

The practical considerations which resulted in the rejection of President Wilson's idea may be raised with even more cogency against Senator Nye's proposal when we survey the nationalized munitions industries of Italy and Russia. It would be impossible for the Government to manufacture all the munitions it is likely to need in time of war without constructing costly plants that would be idle most of the time. Indeed, the Nye committee suggests only that the Army and Navy supply their own peace-time needs. Private industry, thus being deprived of a large share of its normal business, might not be in a position to expand its output to the extent necessary, should an emergency arise.

As the minority members of the committee point out, moreover, there would be "inevitable local, political pressure to maintain these Government plants at full capacity production regardless of actual defense needs and the result will be to encourage armament rather than disarmament." As a corollary to this point, the minority also fears that in the end Federal munition factories would cost more to operate than private plants.

More important still is the fact that Government manufacture of all weapons, ammunition, ships, etc., needed by the Army and Navy would not obviate the need for regulation of foreign trade in munitions. Since it is in this field that most of the abuses have arisen, it does not appear that the proposed remedy is in keeping with the committee's diagnosis.

The country has already had too much sad experience from the casual adoption of desperate remedies that lead to still more serious maladjustments. In this case the very substantial character of the minority report favoring "rigid and conclusive" Government regulation should restrain any hasty and ill-advised move toward socialization of the munitions industry.

Something's wrong. It has been months since something like jigsaw puzzles, yo-yo tops or chain letters broke out in a rash from coast to coast.

Taking the profit out of war might help, but a more certain way to prevent war would be to take the glory out of it.

Of Course, Son, You Ought To Know Best.

Report From Honduras.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In today's edition of The Post there appears a message from Mexico City stating that a group of revolutionists had invaded the Republic of Honduras and that the government troops were defeated. The last part of this message is not true, and to prove it I am transcribing herewith a translation of a cablegram which I received today from the President of Honduras:

Tegucigalpa, Honduras, April 24, 1936.—Legonduras, Washington, D. C. On the ninteenth instant some exiles residing in Nicaragua attacked Plaza El Paraiso (Honduras) and were repelled by the government forces with great loss of life by the revolutionists. The exiles were persecuted until they went back to Nicaraguan territory. All the country is at peace. Carias.

Spread Of Good Will.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is interesting to note, in these trying times, that there is a widespread movement in the interest of goodwill.

Just recently, Mrs. Roosevelt released a number of pigeons, each bearing a message of goodwill to its own home community.

Information has recently been received that the Governors of the States of Texas and North Dakota have indicated that they would declare for a month of goodwill observance in their respective States by the issuance of a proclamation to that effect.

Many organizations, all over this country, as well as in the Old Country, are working toward the observance of a Universal Goodwill month—May. This is not being sponsored by any one organization or group, but is equally the property of any and all who can subscribe to the idea of goodwill.

Mr. Borah Converted?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Consistency, thou art a jewel. It is a jewel, however, that is not worn by our illustrious Senator Borah. Perhaps the distinguished Senator agrees with Emerson that, "A foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds, adored by little statesmen and philosophers and divines."

In the New York Times of February 18, 1923 the Senator had an elaborate article in defense and justification of a bill he had introduced in the Senate to require the concurrence of seven of the nine justices of the Supreme Court, to declare an act of the Congress unconstitutional in the exercise of the court's appellate jurisdiction.

In a recent issue of the Red Book Magazine the Senator had a very sound and most excellent article in defense of the court, and of its authority and duty to invalidate, though done by a majority of its members, unconstitutional laws of the Congress. More power to the Senator in this line of his endeavor, and may he now keep the faith and not backslide, because as a defender of the court he is, indeed, a strong and valiant advocate, and an ally much to be desired.

Washington To Lafayette?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: While the workmen are now improving (?) Lafayette Square by removal of trees and shrubbery and laying glaring paths—though far better than the coarse gravel ones—yet will prove blinding on sunny days if not darkened, I make the following suggestions:

That the statue of George Washington now at the circle at Pennsylvania avenue and Twenty-third street be removed or substituted for the Jackson Statute in Lafayette Square, as this would be ideal and historically correct, i. e., Washington in the center guarded by his aid de camp, Lafayette and Koskiusko, Von Steuben and Rochambeau, in the War of Independence. At a glance I would say that such transference could be made at small expense as the respective bases are about the same. Our able local historians tell us that the square was named when Lafayette visited this city about 1825 as one of the many deserved honors paid him, and therefore, should not be changed.

The Free Press.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The revelations which have been brought to light during the last few days concerning alleged efforts of the President of the United States to influence newspaper editors against the policy of correspondents writing interpretative matter pertaining to Washington news is most shocking as is also the report that the President has collaborated in an endeavor to discredit certain correspondents themselves.

These reports, if correct, constitute one of the most serious indictments of Mr. Roosevelt, both as a man and as a servant of the United States, which have as yet been made.

The wise admonition of Mr. Justice Sutherland in speaking for a unanimous Supreme Court in the Louisiana newspaper tax case, decided on February 10, 1936, should be taken heed of by all:

A free press stands as one of the great interpreters between the Government and the people. To allow it to be fettered is to fetter ourselves. ARTHUR P. HOGAN.

Detroit And Speed.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Doubtless lack of adequate pedestrian control laws—favorite fetish of the full-speed-ahead boys—was to blame for the flock of fatal, and larger flock of near-fatal, accidents on the highway over last week-end! True, several pedestrians were dusted off, to give breath to the statistics, but evidence is lacking that these results were achieved by cars traveling at the crawl stroke.

Yet the auto trade still tells us—in spite of results in New England and isolated spots—it is pure hooey to think speed has anything to do with it. Fifty to 70-mile speeds are safe speeds, in a product that can do no wrong, the moguls of the great and noble industry tell us. Which recalls something similar President Roosevelt said about 50 to 70 billions as "safe" limits of national credit.

But the industry fails to reveal the exact nature of its safety magic, outlawing restriction. The trouble is, it has never got out of Detroit. In its provincialism it can't forget sales, earnings and dividends long enough to be honest with itself and others. F. H. KLING.

A Word For The G-Men.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In reference to Mr. Westbrook Pegler's article, "Presidents Play Ball," appearing in The Post of Wednesday, April 22, I wish to refute, or rather inform, the author on operations within the Department of Justice.

Quote Mr. Pegler: "It may be a good thing for the G-men to shoot to kill in dealing with the Dillingers and Baby Face Nelsons, but when the department goes after men in the politer brackets the custom is to bring 'em back alive." To this vague statement I might answer that the Department of Justice is divided into bureaus, each with its own specific laws to enforce, and that that bureau which so fearlessly snuffed out the most notorious gang of robbers and killers of our history is restricted by legislation to carry on justice which does not include investigation of cases such as J. P. Morgan's, as referred to in the article.

I refer to the Bureau of Investigation, whose agents, directed by Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, proved to be the Dillinger gang's Waterloo, and their game of cops and robbers, as Pegler puts it, has been so successful as to brand them as the most efficient, profitable to the Nation, and successful force of criminal apprehenders in the world today. If there is any doubt of my last statement, comparison of statistics will verify that.

I do not write to label Mr. Pegler's article erroneous, but merely in the interest of more specification on his part in order to prevent any possible heresy being released against a bureau which more closely approaches the ultimate of success than any other in our government. D. J. C.

Belated Recognition.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is perhaps a bit early to make much ado over the trend toward public recognition of syphilis and other venereal maladies as diseases to be combated just as are smallpox, typhoid, diphtheria and tuberculosis, and not as traditional moral punishments deserved by evildoers.

How long must the people suffer and die, and unborn innocent generations be born to suffer and die because of bigotry, superstition and unscientific attitudes. It is refreshing to note the calm and receptive way the citzenry of enlightened Commonwealths are receiving the editorial publicity in the campaign being waged.

Reactions to L'Affaire Zioncheck.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Anent Zioncheck: Please accept my thanks for the editorial, "No Longer Funny," in your April 23 issue. When a man drives 70 miles an hour in a residential district, and thus flouts the law he is no longer a joke but a menace. He becomes a megalomaniac, a colossal ego, who considers himself and no one else.

For giving editorial attention to this social monstrosity, for your cartoon, and for publishing the letter of Alexander Sidney Lanier I thank you. You have rendered a real public service. Mr. Zioncheck is an offense to decent right-thinking people everywhere. You have rightly expressed their sentiments.

As a former resident I am acquainted with the people in the State of Washington. They are among the finest people I have ever met. At least 10,000 men of both parties are better fitted to represent their State than this addle-pated gentleman. And by sending all the data that you furnish to Washington I am seeking to accomplish that object. His boon companion — a baboon—does not serve to enhance his prestige.

Here's to you, not only for the suppression, but for the utter elimination of Mr. Zioncheck as a political force. A. H. THOMPSON.
Washington, April 23.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Permit me to commend you most highly for your editorial on Representative Zioncheck.

May I further respectfully suggest that the press of this city establish a "conspiracy of silence" with respect to this M. C. He and his kind thrive upon publicity, no matter how achieved, and the disappearance of his name from the front page would soon deflate him.

Moreover, this city is heartily tired of him and are more than willing to leave to the police the unpleasant job of dealing with him. They are fully competent to do it to the entire satisfaction of the public and, I believe, of Congress as well. EDWARD C. PORTER.

The Post Impressionist

"Others Abide Our Question."

Post Office, Saturday.

LAST year your columnist criminally allowed the 23d of April to pass without comment—until we were happily enabled to publish a letter on Shakespeare from James M. Beck, whose recent death deprived this department of a faithful friend. But this year we did proper homage to the birthday of the dramatist. We went to the beautiful theater of the Folger Library and heard the commemorative address there given by that scholar best fitted among all living scholars to make it: Dr. Felix Schelling, professor of English literature at the University of Pennsylvania and honorary citizen of the Elizabethan World.

* * * *

His talk was a masterly resume of much Shakespearean biography in particular; inferentially, a keen definition of biography in general.

Suavely he commended the industry of the writers who trace, from the most meager clew, facts that throw light upon the poet.

But just as suavely Dr. Schelling ridiculed those gentlemen—and ladies—who seek political allegories in the clear pools of the plays, not to mention the "cypherists," who will insist that those graceful comedies, those mighty tragedies must have been written by almost anybody other than the man whose name they bear.

* * * *

You may take the Post-Impressionist's word for it—if you weren't lucky enough to be at the Folger Library on Thursday evening:

That there was justice done to Leslie Hoston's "Shakespeare vs. Shallow," wherein a long-forgotten lawsuit is run to earth.

That no quarter was given to Leon Daudet's "Voyage de Shakespeare," which takes the young man of Stratford through a love affair with a Danish actress at Elsinore.

And that the stage was pretty well littered with fragments from "Hamlet and the Scottish Succession," whereby Lilian Winstanley tries to show how the Danish prince is really James V of Scotland, Queen Gertrude, really Mary Queen of Scots, Claudio really Bothwell—and Darnley, presumably, the Ghost.

* * * *

But this columnist was particularly pleased to hear the professor pay his compliments to yet another delver in alleged Shakespeariana.

* * * *

"Not unknown among us," said the doctor, "is the biography of vituperation"—a stunning phrase!—"the species of 'Life' that delights to play at loggats with the bones of forgotten scandal and reduce to a mediocrity of morals the men of genius who tower intellectually above us. Within a very few years there died a man . . . who wrote a book on the basis of a conviction that the white heat of genius must necessarily sere the soul of man. He was generalizing from his personal and petty experiences and, mistaking that clever poseur, his friend Oscar Wilde, for an examplar of genius, found in his despicable criminality and his awful fate an analogue if not a parallel for what he determined must have been the misconduct and fate of Shakespeare.

* * * *

"In this book" continued Dr. Schelling, "by . . . the bias which a search for any definite kind of thing must always entail, we reach the outrageous conclusion that the price which the world has paid for these highest manifestations of drama and poetry—the plays of Shakespeare—was the moral overthrow and wreck of the greatest human minds."

* * * *

The volume was "The Man Shakespeare and his Tragic Life-Story." The author was Frank Harris.

This columnist, unhappily, used to know Harris—for as brief a time as possible—and assures you that Harris deserved the personal censure implicit in Dr. Schelling's literary criticism.

* * * *

We can still see the creature enter the dining room of that little hotel in Irving Place, New York, which he was then inhabiting: a man with hair too artfully black, a "stand-up" pink collar, who carried a demijohn of wine with him—because this was a "temperance" hostelry. In a Bull of Bashan voice, Harris is bawling ribaldries.

Even then, he must have been miraculously old, for he would tell you he had been the confidant of the youthful Tennyson's love-affairs, was capable of repeating the most intimate confessions allegedly made to him by the young Thackeray—and an even younger Carlyle.

* * * *

We haven't read Harris' Shakespeare book. But we are serenely certain that Harris would be willing to swear he used to be a companion in debaucheries with the author of "Othello."

P. S.: The interesting announcement, scheduled to appear today in this space, has been unavoidably delayed. You will, however, do well to keep on looking for it not too many days hence.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler.

Not Moscow, But Berlin.

You may count me among those who view the so-called Red menace with appropriate alarm, but I would feel better about the American campaign against communism if it were a little less friendly to the kind of dictatorship which Mussolini invented and Adolf Hitler copied and adorned with certain murderous innovations of his own.

As between communism and the Mussolini-Hitler type of government by massacre and snitching, I see no choice but the present American system with all its irritating imperfections, its graft and individual crime, its sometimes frantic and silly coverage of picturesque murders in the papers, incompetence, high taxes and all.

The Republic has its faults, but nobody can say that we ignore them, for the whole country has been resounding with recrimination for the last seven years, and we still have our freedom to squawk, criticize, start a hot-dog stand, go to church, or take a trip, all of which would be abolished under any dictator.

* * * *

The people who are howling down communism and shouting up Mussolini and Hitler in the United States are the same sort who financed and helped to organize Mussolini and Hitler, and they are using the same stooge—bolshevism.

But the majority of Americans stand to lose either way, for it comes down to a mere question of what sort of shirt the hoodlums wear when they come calling on the victim in the night. And not enough Americans actually realize what a low and villainous lot of murderers they were—what evil mediocrities and neighborhood ne'er-do-wells, what dead-beats, street-corner roues and bums—who made up the original bands of patriots in Italy and Germany.

If a dictator ever took charge in this country, his best lieutenants would be men of the foul and reckless character of that Stephenson, of Indiana, who ran the Ku Klux Klan until he went to prison for life for murdering his woman.

* * * *

I agree that Roosevelt has been inching up very close to a dictatorship, whether he thinks so or not, and for that reason look with suspicion on the ballyhoo for the so-called G-men of the Department of Justice, who seem to be a pretty good force of fly-cops in their present line of work. Of course, they are not as good as the New York police, who are by all odds the best in the world, but they stand out as super-cops by comparison with the cheap and sloppy misfits of most other American cities and towns where any lump sum of meat big enough to fill a uniform is eligible for the force if he has the proper backing and a proper lack of decency, ambition and self-respect.

Most American police departments are conducted on the lines of the Capitol police in Washington, a force largely made up of small-town tough guys who love authority and hate work. A commander of the Capitol police once told me that his cops were undoubtedly the most incompetent, shiftless, undisciplined gang of bulls in the world, due to the fact that they were appointed by Congressmen solely because they were useless and couldn't be removed.

If Mr. Roosevelt, after re-election, should begin to toss his head and go to town, as the saying goes, the G-men, like Huey Long's Louisiana Cheka, would be enlarged into a secret army, and that wouldn't be so good.

* * * *

You may remember that when Huey Long still lived his Treasury Department was turned loose against Huey and his political collectors in Louisiana to nail them on income-tax charges. This was Huey's own way of doing, to be sure, but the National Government of the Republic was in very bad business when it adopted the methods of a notorious political gangster to lick him in a fight. Huey used to whip his opponents with assessments and tax prosecutions, but Roosevelt and Farley have always pretended to be above such practice. I don't think they would have gone after Huey as they did if Huey had behaved.

I doubt that many native Americans are giving any serious friendly thought to communism, but Fascism and Nazism, or the American adaptation of both, is a greater danger because we have had experiments in that kind of government in the guise of the Ku Klux, the Anti-Saloon League and the Night Riders. It is a weakness of ours. In every such case the operating forces were the lowest, the most brutal and greedy individuals in the community, the American equivalent of the Italian Black Shirt and the German Storm Trooper.

The threat of dictatorship is a little more real now than it was six months ago, but it isn't Moscow that threatens us; it is Rome and Berlin.

Five Attack Jailer, Flee From Cells

Carlinville, Ill., April 24 (AP).—Five men escaped from the Macoupin County Jail here this afternoon after locking the jailer in a cell block and choking him into unconsciousness.

The five prisoners drove away in an automobile stolen from the jailor, Joe Vallero.

The escaped men, all held on charges of burglary and larceny, were Raymond Sainer, of Staunton, Ill.; Joseph Lombardo, of Gillespie, Ill.; Coleman and Walter Langley, of Benld, Ill., brothers, and John Starkman, of Perth Amboy, N. J.

The men, who were awaiting trial, drove eastward and officials of surrounding counties were asked to watch the highways. A submachine gun and other weapons were stolen from the jail.

Vallero, liberated soon after the break, said he was seized and choked after he had been shaved by Staryak, a barber.

The Paralysis Eased

League Council Meeting Unblocks Europe's Stalemate, But Leaves Big Question Of Further Sanctions Against Italy Undecided.

By Livingston Hartley.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

The meeting of the League of Nations Council on April 20 has clarified certain aspects of the European diplomatic confusion created by Hitler's reoccupation of the Rhineland.

It has shown in the first place that the worst phase of this confusion has already been liquidated and that the paralysis it inflicted on European politics has begun to disappear. The collective attempt to restrain Mussolini in Africa still persists at Geneva without either an open break between Great Britain and France or a collapse of the sanctions front. However ineffective this collective action has proved from a purely military angle, its continuance is of great importance to the future of Anglo-French relations and the whole League system of security.

When German troops moved into the Rhineland, many observers believed that the concerted action of the League powers against Italy would break down completely. To France in particular, Mussolini's million men represented an asset of more immediate importance than any regime of collective security. The temptation to secure this asset at any cost in legal guarantees and obligations was great, so great as to threaten the collapse of the entire sanctions front. An excuse for yielding to this temptation was also readily available, since it became apparent in March that no international action short of war could keep the Italian army out of Addis Ababa.

The decision of the League powers to continue existing sanctions against Italy is the outcome of six weeks of fierce diplomatic struggle between the British and French governments, a struggle marked by mutual recriminations of unprecedented bitterness in the press of both countries. So bitter was the press campaign on both sides of the channel that fearsome pictures were painted of a British rapprochement with Germany and the creation of an opposing Franco-Italian bloc in the Mediterranean. These pictures, however, underestimated certain fundamental political realities which have once more proved their decisive importance.

British And French Never See Eye To Eye.

Since both Great Britain and France are democracies, neither government can go far in positive foreign action without the support of public opinion. Even at the best of times the French and British people do not see eye to eye, owing to that lack of mutual understanding which seems to exist between the Latin and the Anglo-Saxon as between the Latin and the Anglo-Saxon as between the cat and the dog. The ordinry Frenchman prefers the company of the Italian and the ordinary Englishman finds the individual German more sympathetic.

The French and British governments, however, are forced to work together by geography and common interests in spite of the natural antitpathy of their peoples. The airplane and the submarine have placed France in a position to threaten far more effectively than can any other power the sea communications which are the life blood of the British Isles.

Baldwin said in 1934 that the British frontier had moved to the Rhine, and the British Government has now promised military assistance to protect the frontier from invasion. No matter how pro-German English public opinion may become or what the French press may say, this condition will remain because British and French national security are mutually dependent. If Great Britain allows French national power to be destroyed, she must eventually face an expanding Germany alone. This fact was obvious in 1914; subsequent military developments have made it even more obvious today.

Although political realities set a limit to Anglo-French hostility, Anglo-French co-operation is in turn limited by the attitude of their respective peoples. The explosion of mutual popular antagonism that occurred in March paralyzed their joint action in Europe, and threatened the enactment of unilateral policies, such as French abandonment of collective security and existing sanctions against Italy, which would seriously prejudice their joint interests. The decision of the League Council to continue present measures against Italy shows that this threat has not materialized, and that the fundamental relationship between France and Great Britain remains one of the strongest props of European stability.

The other main result of the Council meeting is the continuance of the fight for collective security. If sanctions had been abandoned it would have meant the death of the whole conception of national security by international action, the indisputable triumph of force over law, and the relegation of the League to a glorified conciliation commission. This disaster has been avoided so far, but the Italian army continues to advance on Addis Ababa.

Collective Security Not Yet Defeated.

The outlook for the future is undeniably black, but certain basic facts should not be forgotten. The Ethiopian struggle involves not two but three parties, Ethiopia, Italy and the League. If Haile Selassie's armies are disintegrated and his cities occupied, the struggle is not automatically terminated. It can only be terminated by a settlement between Italy and the League powers, which must be either the abandonment of sanctions and the admitted failure of the whole League effort, or compromise peace terms which the League powers accept.

The final settlement will, of course, be influenced by the military campaign and its effects on the two belligerents. The Italian army has won decisive victories with the aid of modern equipment and mustard gas, and the imminent fall of Addis Ababa and Harar is now counted as certain. Will this be the end? Our own experiences in the war against Aguinaldo in the Philippines and in the expedition against Sandino in Nicaragua would answer this question in the negative. So would Ethiopian geography and the approaching rainy season.

A war between two industrial nations is usually terminated if the capital and leading cities of one belligerent are occupied by the enemy, since the economic life of the defeated country becomes paralyzed. These conditions do not apply in Ethiopia, where the "cities" are of minor importance and the local communities self-supporting. To occupy these cities is one thing; to subjugate Ethiopia another, since the first may be done in eight months and the second may require years.

Economic Conquest Of Ethiopia Yet To Come.

Consequently, Haile Selassie can continue to carry on a guerrilla war against the exposed and extensive communications of the enemy as primitive leaders have so frequently done in the past, the first phase only of the present war will end with the fall of Addis Ababa. How may this situation affect Italy and the League powers?

Italian military victories will end with the capture of Addis Ababa and Harar. Then will begin the long and costly process of subjugation, which would tax Italian national resources to the utmost even if sanctions did not exist. Communications will have to be maintained through the rainy season over hundreds of miles of roads in the face of guerrilla attacks. A huge army will have to be maintained 3,000 miles from home at tremendous cost. When no more victories are obtainable and the strain on Italy does not lessen, the Italian people may begin to weaken and question the wisdom of Mussolini's enterprise.

The wearing effect of League sanctions on Italy has already been shown to be progressive in character, pointing toward the exhaustion of Italy's gold reserves by September. In the situation envisaged above these sanctions might yet prove the very substantial straw that breaks the camel's back.

The decisive question now is not whether Addis Ababa will fall, but whether sanctions will be continued. The pressure that Rumania and Yugoslavia are reported to have put on their ally France to stand firm against Italy at Geneva is of particular interest in this connection.

The League powers now appear to have the future of collective security in their own hands. If they can maintain an inflexible stand on the present sanction line, there is some reason to believe that the final outcome of the Ethiopian war will be compromise rather than conquest.

Psychiatrist's Report.

("The murder suspect was found to have been frequently released by the court on the report of psychiatrists."—News item.)

Oh, he stole a car
And he stole a horse
And he stole some copper cable,
So our findings are
In the case, of course,
He's "emotionally unstable."

He's been known to shoot
At a cop or two
And to take drugs in big doses,
But we think he's cute
And it all is due
To a matter of "psychoses."

Once he robbed a bank
And he slugged a clerk,
And a girl he tried to smother;
He's a bug and crank
And he will not work—
But he's lovely to his mother!

He's a stickup man
With a bandit crew;
He's a yeggman base and burly
But we think we can Trace his actions to
His "release from school too early!"

He once robbed a train
And the trainmen, too,
And he burns down railroad stations,
But we say again
It's entirely due
To his "fantasy formations."

He has passed bad checks
With the greatest ease
And he boasts of talents fistic,
But it doesn't vex,
If your honor please,
For the boy is "narcissistic."

He once stabbed a lad
And he robbed a firm
While we had him on probation,
But he isn't bad
And we now affirm
It was due to a "fixation."

So just let him go
On his uncurbed way
(Other action would surprise him);
Should some deed quite low
Be his work some day
We can always analyze him!

The top speech of the publishers' convention was made by Dr. John Stewart Bryan, president of William and Mary College and publisher of the Richmond News Leader. Dr. Bryan said that the attitude of many people in the present crisis was like that of the Confederate soldier who said in the midst of the mud and misery of Lee's last campaign, "If ever I love a country again, well, damn me!"

And the publishers, he said, find themselves in the position of the soldier who in the midst of a bombardment began to sing "Backward, oh, backward, turn time in your flight. Make me a child again just for tonight," and one of his friends said, "Yes, and a gal child at that."

amount could be turned over, and probably will be, for continuation of the Works Progress Administration program.

"An additional appropriation of $800,000,000 made at this session of Congress, if $700,000,000 of the $1,500,000,000 proposed relief fund is allocated to PWA, would increase the total available to WPA to $1,842,000,000.

"The $1,842,000,000 fund would be sufficient to continue operations until Congress convenes in January, when the necessary funds can be provided to complete unfinished projects.

Urges Continuation.

Beiter said he advocated continuation of both WPA and PWA "at top speed until private industry is able to absorb the unemployed, at which time both agencies can reduce their activities."

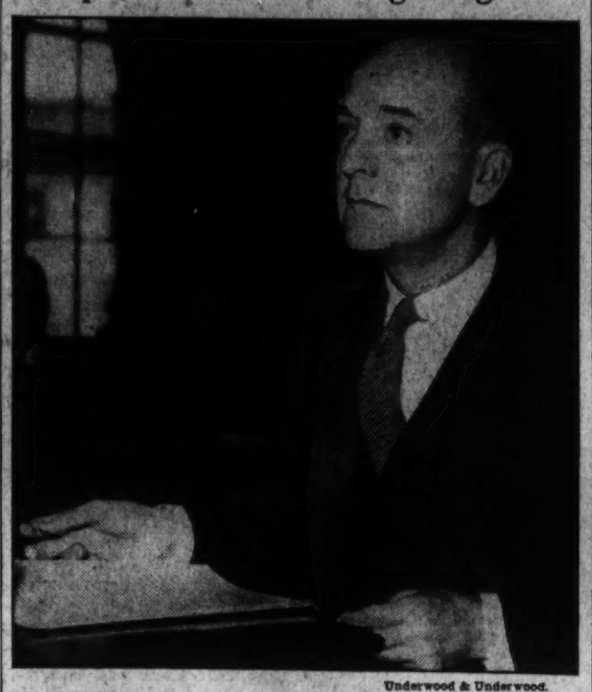
"The fact cannot be overlooked that industry must eventually absorb more of the unemployed if we would recapture that Utopia enjoyed before the economic crash," Beiter said in a statement. "It is a fact that Government cannot continue indefinitely to carry the burden. Trading on its future income to maintain its unemployed is both permissible and commendable when human suffering makes it imperative. But common sense tells us that this cannot in any way create prosperity.

"We can, if we will, give industry an opportunity to prove their willingness to take over the burden * * *. The public works program is particularly adapted to do this, since over a million people will be directly and indirectly employed at a comparatively small man-year cost to the Government. Public works will stimulate private enterprise and assist in taking persons off the relief rolls. * * * Let us complete PWA's unfinished business."

Arms Drill Rise Urged.

Manila, April 24 (AP).—A record registration of 20-year-old Filipinos for compulsory military training caused Douglas MacArthur, military adviser to President Manuel Quezon, to recommend today that 40,000 men be trained this year instead of 20,000 men as originally planned. Total registration is more than 148,000.

Dispute Seen on Housing Program



Underwood & Underwood.

Peter Grimm, of New York, who resigned recently as special assistant to Secretary of Treasury in charge of housing, was critical of the Administration's housing program when he appeared before Senate Labor Committee yesterday. PWA housing division issued denial of his charges.

Tax Bill Attacked

lation," said Wadsworth. "We do not originate much more than the enacting clause of legislation."

The New Yorker said he was proud of his House membership, but opposed to the "surrender of our legislative prerogatives."

Wadsworth was particularly critical of the proposed 80 per cent "windfall" tax on refunded processing levies, which he charged was an attempt to "shake down" small packers.

Throughout the day House Republicans leveled a raking fire at virtually every provision of the bill. Representative Daniel R. Reed, of New York, charged not more than 5 per cent of the House could agree on what the bill provided. He called it a "fantastic experimental proposal like those we have been used to getting from the New Deal." Representative Harold Knutson, of Minnesota, said the provisions not only "jeopardize" small business, but "will encourage business to increase the outstanding stock, which will mean more watered stock to pay dividends on."

Representative Lamneck, sole Democratic member of the Ways and Means Committee to vote "no" on reporting the tax bill, struck sweepingly at the measure as a whole and in detail, then appealed to members to consider the bill on its merits and not from a party standpoint.

As an instance of alleged injustice, he cited the case of a company that borrowed $50,000 since March 3, and later made $50,000 in earnings. If the company used the earnings to pay its debt, he said it would have to borrow $21,250 more to pay a 42½ per cent tax to the Government.

He said one of the chief aims of the bill is to force closely held corporations to distribute their earnings. He said the Ford Motor Co. is a "striking example" of such corporations which would be seriously injured, adding that Ford is employing 180,000 men and women directly and about a million people depend upon him for their daily bread."

"It will tend toward monopoly," he said. "It will prevent weak corporations and those with impaired capital from rebuilding their capital structures, which have been terribly depleted during the depression. It will prevent the accumulation of the necessary surplus for the rainy day to pay dividends during the depression; to keep men employed during the depression years; it will prevent business from accumulating earnings for plant improvement and for developments generally."

Lamneck said the bill is a "Chinese puzzle" and "no good." At one point he directed his attack at Chairman Robert L. Doughton, of the Ways and Means Committee, who, Lamneck said, had refused to grant time for Democrats who wanted to speak against the bill. He said he was forced to ask Republicans for time in order to make a speech.

Despite the complex nature of the bill, understood only by a handful of House members, at no time during debate were there more than 100 members on the floor. Meeting an hour early, leaders expect to complete general debate on the bill on Monday, and then vote on the various provisions of the bill itself. Passage, largely without change, is expected Wednesday or Thursday.

Even though conservative Democratic members of the Senate Finance Committee, who sought further enlightment from experts yesterday, continued to express dissatisfaction with the bill in its present form, what action the committee may take in the face of strong Administration pressure for approval was problematic.

Formal hearings will begin before the Senate group on Monday, with Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau probably on the witness stand.

A statement by Senator William H. King, of Utah, yesterday was typical of some of the Democratic sentiment on the committee.

"If I had my way," said King, "I would provide instead for reducing individual income tax exemptions, and for some increases in the present income tax rate. In addition, I would increase the corporation income tax rate only 2 or 3 per cent. That plan would raise a great deal more money, and it would not change our present tax framework, which has behind it a long history of adjudications, and is understood by the people. The plan proposed in the House bill would plunge us into years of litigation."

three factors as largely responsible for the heavy increase in America's import trade last year. The factors were given as: non-resort by this country to wide arbitrary controls of import trade; returning domestic industrial activity; the scarcity and high price levels of some foodstuffs.

The review stated:

"Measured by value, nearly 90 per cent of 100 chief imports were larger than in 1934. Measured by quantity, 86 per cent of our leading imports exceeded the 1934 figures. Many of the increases were very large, especially in agricultural products. A number of all-time high marks were established by individual commodities during the year."

The review showed that the largest quantity of coffee ever brought into the United States was imported during 1935, totaling 1,750,000,000 pounds, 15 per cent in excess of 1934 imports and 10 per cent greater than the 1930-34 average.

Guatemala Accord.

In the meantime the State Department announced the signing of a reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Guatemala at Guatemala City.

The twelfth pact to be consummated in the Administration's reciprocal trade program, the agreement will become effective 30 days after it is formally proclaimed by the Presidents of both countries. Mutual trade concessions are made by both countries under it. Details are to be announced.

A number of addresses on the tariff question, including one by Robert Lincoln O'Brien, chairman of the United States tariff commission, will be given at a meeting of the International chamber in connection with the United States chamber.

One of the most controversial matters to be studied will be the current Congressional proposals to regulate price-making methods. Chairman of the group session studying the matter will be Silas H. Strawn, Chicago attorney. Liberty Leaguer and member of the Winston, Strawn and Shaw firm which obtained an injunction recently to prevent the Western Union from turning its private telegrams over to the Black lobby committee of the Senate.

Much interest is evinced in this section of the program. Retailers, wholesalers and manufacturers are known to be widely concerned in the price discrimination bills, basing point proposals and other measures in Congress which would overhaul drastically the long-standing competitive price situation, the freight equalization methods now in operation in basic industries, and the discounts, allowances and other trade practices.

Transportation, natural resources, production, agriculture, labor conditions, responsibilities of business in Government, housing, industrial relations, business insurance programs, Federal revenue policies, distribution and business organization will be taken up in group discussion, speech-making and the passage of resolutions.

The resolutions, most important activity of the convention, since they represent the conclusions of the membership of nearly 750,000 in the United States, will be released on the last day of the convention.

They are expected to oppose a permanent program for agriculture under Government control, at least to some extent, while declaring for adequate protection of farmers' interests; to urge upbuilding of the air service, to uphold the powers of the courts in general and of the Supreme Court in particular, to urge that the Government retire from the housing field, to protest against the "invasion of fields of business by the Government," to denounce Government competition with private industry, to urge increased highway construction, to denounce subversive activities and communistic propaganda and to demand Government economy and revision of tax programs for greater uniformity.

Although the sessions will begin with luncheon meeting Monday, the general meeting Tuesday at 10 a. m. will be the formal opening of the convention.

2,000 Movie Employes Are Voted Pay Increase

New York, April 24 (AP).—Pat Casey, labor adviser to the motion picture industry, announced today that movie firms had granted a pay increase of 10 per cent for Hollywood studio employes and 15 per cent for teamsters and chauffeurs.

The advances were estimated to mean a $2,000,000 greater pay roll for 7,000 employes in the next 12 months. The revisions were the product of a week of conferences between producers and officials of labor unions.

8,000 More Trout Stocked in Streams

Baltimore, April 24 (AP).—The State Conservation Commission predicted today that Maryland fishermen will have good sport over the week-end.

Frank Bentz, chief clerk to the commission, announced that 8,000 additional legal size trout had been stocked in streams and that rainbow trout had started biting. Brown trout had been biting since opening of the season April 1.

Fifteen thousand additional trout are ready to be stocked in the near future, Bentz said. That will bring the total for the season to 62,000.

Grimm Urges Aid to Industry In Housing Bill

Former Treasury Officer Approves Aims, He Tells Committee.

By the Associated Press.

Safeguards for the interests of private enterprise were held necessary for the success of a Government subsidized housing program yesterday by Peter Grimm, former assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, in testifying before the Senate Labor Committee on the $876,000,000 Wagner Housing bill.

"You can't expect private enterprise to undertake low cost housing unless you play fair with it," he said, adding that the present housing program is "too laborous."

He asserted that "not one of the five limited dividend corporations of the Public Works Administration is able to meet its obligations to the Federal Government, notwithstanding each pays no taxes."

These observations were immediately challenged by Ira S. Robbins, counsel for the New York State Housing Authority, who stated some of the corporations alluded to were successful and that not all were exempt from taxation. Mrs. E. E. Wood, of Cape May, N. J., a writer on housing topics said Grimm had been "all wrong" in his statements.

Clas Also Differs.

Also taking issue with Grimm's statement, was A. R. Clas, director of housing for the PWA, who said that the seven limited dividend corporation housing projects under PWA have been making payments regularly.

"They have made available to approximately 11,000 persons good living accommodations at rentals well under the $12.50 per room per month allowed by the New York State housing laws," the statement continued.

Records of the projects, the statement said, show that the Alta Vista Housing Corporation in Alta Vista, Va., has paid to the Government $5,221 in interest and $2,147 in principal, with its occupancy 100 per cent. It cites the six other corporations and gives a record of their operations to date.

"Any statement to the effect that these limited dividend housing projects are failing to meet payment," the statement continued, "is a reflection upon the integrity and ability of the corporations and the men who made these projects possible."

Grimm, who made a protracted study of housing while in the Treasury, expressed approval for the objectives of the Wagner bill, but added, "I am unhappy at the means to be taken to accomplish these objectives."

The bill would provide for the extension of Federal loans and grants to local housing authorities over a four-year period.

He criticied sections which would allow aid to limited dividend corporations and the erection of demonstration projects. He outlined his views in a report on the whole subject made to President Roosevelt some time ago and made public in abstract form for the first time today.

30-Year Program.

This recommended a 30-year program with a total Government subsidy of $594,468,000. Under it 20,000 dwelling units would be set up by the end of 1937 and the number would be increased at a geometric rate of 50 per cent annually for the next four years.

Features of Grimm's proposal were:

"1. Any slum clearance or rehabilitation projects subsidized by the Federal Government shall be to replace old housing actually demolished.

"2. Any housing subsidized by the Federal Government shall conform to minimum standards of adequacy and to maximum rent schedules prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

"3. Tenancy must be strictly limited to families unable to pay an economic rent for unsubsidized housing, new or old, of adequate standards.

"4. All housing projects must be initiated, the site selected and acquired, the building constructed and managed by non-Federal agencies.

"Fifty per cent of the rentals required to support the housing projects shall be obtained from the rentals actually charged the tenants; 25 per cent shall be paid as a subsidy by the Federal Government, and 25 per cent shall be paid as a subsidy by State governments, local governments, or private citizens, acting jointly or severally."

Enactment of the Wagner bill was advocated by A. J. Stewart, Louisville banker; Walter White, of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Miss Catherine Bauer, of the labor housing conference; Col. L. Kemper Williams, of the New Orleans committee on housing, and Mrs. Wood.

Measure Aiding Widow Of Policeman Passed

By the Associated Press.

Payment of $5,000 to the widow of a Kansas City, Mo., policeman killed in the Kansas City gang massacre June 1, 1933, was proposed in a bill passed yesterday by the Senate and sent to the White House.

The woman is Myrtle T. Grooms, widow of one of the Kansas City policemen detailed to receive Frank Nash as he was leaving a train in custody of Federal officers taking him to Leavenworth Penitentiary.

Nash, an escaped convict, was taken from the train and the "massacre" followed as his comrades sought to shoot him to freedom.

Business Urged To Ask Parties' Policies on Jobs

Moley Advises Manufacturers to Insist on Reply on Re-employment.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 24.—Business was urged by Raymond Moley tonight to demand definite statements of policy from the contending parties in this year's national election campaigns.

Moley, former chief Administration "brain truster" and now a magazine editor, told the guests at a dinner sponsored by the directors of the National Association of Manufacturers that they should insist particularly on an answer to the question of re-employment. His speech was broadcast over WJZ-N. B. C.

"Now is the time, if ever, when the citizen gets his innings," he said. "We are now two months away from that great American festival known as the conventions, and six months away from that great morning after—the election.

"If ever Mr. John Q. Citizen has a chance to stand up on his two legs and demand the right to be heard, it is now * * *.

"It is up to all of us to make our orders specific. Make your demands in no partisan or hostile spirit. Make them so considered, so fair, so reasonable, that you will have the public with you. And make them so definite that even a politician cannot evade them."

Holds Job Problem First.

Listing unemployment as the most pressing problem, Moley expressed the opinion that "we are now sufficiently advanced in recovery so that further emergency doses are inappropriate."

Housing, the most promising activity for private re-employment, seems to be stymied for another year, he said, by "petty bickerings, by inordinate ambitions and by interference from departments of the Government which have no legitimate interest in the subject whatsoever."

"In utilities and shipping, as well as in housing," he continued, "a definition of the respective spheres of public and private enterprise would be most helpful.

"Let this be a campaign of definition, not recrimination."

Relief and taxation were other subjects listed by Moley on which he said specific programs should be demanded.

Would "Teach" Public.

In urging better relations between Government and business, Moley said the public should be taught that business is an organic part of society, rather than an "orchidaceous growth on the tree of society."

Moley said the Administration at Washington had failed to establish sufficiently strong points of contact between business and Government.

"The most notably successful channels of understanding have been Jesse Jones, Joe Kennedy, John Fahey and Dan Roper," he said. "But more are needed.

"Our national co-ordinator of industrial co-operation cannot expect to be taken seriously now that he has undertaken the political mobilization of organized labor. Co-ordination, indeed!"

Excess Taxes On Minnesota Firms Voided

By the Associated Press.

St. Paul, April 24.—In a decision promptly condemned by Farmer-Labor Gov. Floyd B. Olson, the State Supreme Court today ruled Minnesota's corporate excess tax law invalid.

Shortly after the high tribunal handed down its ruling affirming a district court order contending the 57-year-old State law was invalid through implied repeal in subsequent statutes, Gov. Olson termed the decision a "flagrant abuse of judicial discretion."

The chief executive only recently had sponsored efforts of the tax commission to enforce the long-neglected law on the ground it would tap undeveloped and new sources of State revenue to lift the burden from property.

Today's decision—in which only Chief Justice John P. Devaney, an Olson appointee, dissented—upheld the lower court's ruling in a test case instituted by the Bemis Bros. Bag Co., of St. Louis, representing foreign corporations, and the S. H. Clausin & Co., Minneapolis wholesale jewelers, for domestic corporations.

Their action was brought against the State tax commission and the Hennepin County auditor and Minneapolis city assessor after the commission had instructed those officials to make levies for 1933 under the terms of the corporate excess tax law.

Charging the decision has saved millions of dollars for public utilities and other big business enterprises in the State, Olson declared "the people cannot veto the decision of the Supreme Court, but fortunately they still have the power to retire some of the men who made it."

Corporate excess was defined in the old law as the amount remaining when the total value of real and personal property and money and credits was subtracted from the total value of a corporation's stocks and bonds. Assessment was at the regular rate at which real estate was assessed in the county in which the corporation had its headquarters.

Seamstress Burned In Dress Shop Fire

Mrs. Margaret Hill, a seamstress, was burned on her face and hands yesterday when fire swept the dress shop of Mrs. A. T. Pearlston, 1114 Connecticut avenue, where she is employed.

Firemen said they learned that Mrs. Hill was in the rear of the shop when the blaze started. She was injured as she tried to turn in the alarm. So rapidly did the flames spread that firemen were forced to shatter the front window to enter the building.

The fire, said to have been due to defective wiring, caused an estimated damage of $5,000. The entire stock of dresses was scorched or burned.

Finley Dunne, Humorist, Dies Of Long Illness

Writer Who Won Fame as 'Mr. Dooley' Succumbs in New York.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 24.—Finley Peter Dunne, 68, author of the famous Mr. Dooley stories, died tonight after a long illness.

He died in his room at the Delmonico Hotel, where he had lived since coming East five months ago for treatments.

Only his physicians were with him at the time of his death. His widow, Mrs. Margaret Abbott Dunne, and his sons were immediately notified at their homes in Hollywood, Calif.

During the last few months, he had been working on his memoirs, which he had hoped to have ready for publication sometime this year.

A native of Chicago, Dunne was educated in the public schools of that city and at 19 began his journalistic career as reporter. Within three years he became city editor of the Chicago Times. In 1892 he went to the Chicago Evening Post, remaining there for three years.

He was next a member of the editorial staff of the Chicago Times Herald, and in January, 1908, was appointed editor of the Chicago Journal.

Under the pen name of "Martin Dooley" or "Mr. Dooley," he contributed to the Journal a series of articles in the Irish dialect which immediately won for him an immense popularity, creating for their author a reputation as one of the foremost American humorists.

Most of Dunne's writings were published in book form, including "Mr. Dooley in Peace and War," "Mr. Dooley in the Hearts of His Countrymen," "Mr. Dooley's Philosophy," "Mr. Dooley's Opinions," "Observations by Mr. Dooley" and "Dissertations by Mr. Dooley."

"Dooley's" utterances were universally quoted and, being mostly on current topics of the day, many of them became proverbial. One critic wrote:

"He found the human quality in what fell to his consideration; he saw the humor and the sense and the pathos of every day life * * * the result is that Mr. Dooley is a national character."

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.

Custodial employes of the Post Office Department are taking keen interest in an order of First Assistant Postmaster General W. W. Howes, which provides that watchmen, messengers, classified laborers in the postoffices, classified laborers in the Railway Mail Service, classified employes of the Motor Vehicle Service, and classified employes of the custodial service, after three years' satisfactory service, may be permitted to take non-competitive examinations for clerk or carrier.

BAKER.

Employes who pass the non-competitive examinations will be placed at the foot of the roll of substitutes, but may retain their present assignments until they have advanced to senior substitute, when they will be assigned as substitute clerk or carrier.

This is an extension to other groups of a privilege that has been enjoyed by post office laborers several years. The American Federation of Government Employes has been much interested in obtaining a more specific policy, such as is outlined in this departmental order, for heretofore opportunity to take such examinations has depended upon nomination by the Postmaster, with the result that not all qualified employes were afforded the opportunity to compete.

On the Air Today

Nothing could be of more importance in beginning this new radio day than to remind you again that daylight-saving time becomes effective in radioland tomorrow. If you are a Maj. Bowes fiend, be at the radio set at 7 instead of 8. If you want to be sure to hear the final Philharmonic concert with Toscanini, be on hand at 2 instead of the usual 3. And from now on, the local stations shut down at midnight, instead of 1 a. m.

John Hurley becomes a regular member of the N. B. C. announcing staff, effective Monday. Hurley came to the attention of WRC executives when they spotted him taking a leading part in the radio dramatization of the Federal Bureau of Investigation Theater group one-act play, "The Game of Chess."

His experience proves that the announcing field in radio is fertile indeed. Radio is still one of those things that many want to enter—but few seem to find the open sesame. Voice, of course, is the first requirement. Experience is highly desirable, especially in a city of Washington's size.

And yet, experienced announcers seem to be scarce. At least those candidates who present themselves do not measure up to network station hopes here. There's hardly a week passes that executives of the three networks would not give three loud cheers to be able to enter in their mental notebooks: Good announcer, named Blank, available on call.

N. B. C. is taking a noteworthy step in employing Hurley, who has had no studio experience whatever, and training him to meet their standards. I hope he makes a big success of it.

Ever notice in the movie reels the array of microphones in front of a prominent man making a speech? Well, they'll be absent when the two national political conventions get under way. Arrangements have been made to have a single pickup system this year. All networks and individual stations making pickups from the conventions will get their speeches from one mike. However, each broadcaster may use the program emanating from the rostrum or not, just to suit himself. If he wishes, he may eliminate portions of the talk on the platform and substitute speakers and material from his own broadcast booth, at the side of the stage. But there will be one microphone, and only one, this year before the platform speaker.

Culbertson on Bridge

Guide to Defense.

In many situations the best guide for the defenders is simply to determine what the declarer wants them to do—and then do the other thing. If the declarer is an expert, it is to be assumed that he is adopting the line of play best calculated to succeed. "Opportunities" that he may present to the defenders must be viewed with the deepest suspicion.

When the declarer plays so badly that it simply is a question as to what particular mistake he has made, even experts may have trouble with the defense.

East opened the ten of spades and declarer, for some unimaginable reason, allowed the ten to hold the trick. East hardly could guess that this hold-up was wrong and that a diamond shift almost surely would have led to the hand's defeat. He continued spades; dummy won with the ace and led a low heart up to the queen. The king won and East now shifted to the jack of diamonds.

Dummy's ace won, the heart suit was run off without further loss, and declarer's diamond king remained an entry for the ninth trick, the spade king.

Had East been able to imagine it, declarer's first round hold-up play gave the defenders an excellent chance to defeat the contract. A diamond shift would have been embarrassing to the declarer. True, he still could make the hand by double-dummy play, but not knowing the location of the heart king he could not have risked the unblock of the spade ace, which would have been necessary to the cashing of his own king. For him to take the first diamond lead with dummy's king, lay down the spade ace, and then lead a heart from dummy would have invited a large penalty if West instead of East had held the king of hearts well guarded.

East hardly could be criticized for failing to guess that the declarer had laid himself wide open.

Decatur House Draws Throng Of Sightseers

Miss Bori, Metropolitan Star, Will Pour Tea This Afternoon.

By Dudley Harmon.

Lucrezia Bori, who arrived last night to visit Mrs. Tracy Dows, will pour tea this afternoon at Decatur House, which Mrs. Truxton Beale opened to the public yesterday for the benefit of the National Symphony Orchestra. The Metropolitan star has appeared several times as soloist with the orchestra.

Antique furniture, historic relics and an orchestra combined to interest the distinguished crowd yesterday on the first afternoon of the opening. As dignified marines stood at attention in the long halls and high-ceilinged rooms, curious visitors wandered through the house and into the garden for tea. In the garden a Negro orchestra dressed in straw hats and overalls began the afternoon by singing plantation songs and ended with the latest dance tunes.

Photographers with their cameras were in abundance yesterday. Mrs. Nicholas Longworth obligingly posed for pictures accepting a cup of tea from Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture. Later Mrs. Longworth took a short turn at the tea table.

Everybody commented on the costume worn by Miss Stellita Stapleton, daughter of Mrs. Daniel C. Stapleton, who served tea. Her dress and shawl were worn by one of her ancestors at the last party given in Decatur House by Commodore Decatur. Around her wrist was a relic of the days when sentiment flourished, a bracelet in the form of tiny hearts made out of what was once the hair of a distinguished great-aunt and all the members of her very considerable family.

Miss Gertrude Laughlin, whose father, Mr. Irwin Laughlin, was once Ambassador to Spain, was another member of the group serving tea whose costume was the object of comment. She brought it back from the Asturias, a Spanish province. The full skirt was striped in brown and tan, and the bodice was of rich brown velvet laced across the front.

Although the sun shone brightly, yesterday's breezes made the garden almost cold. Most of the young girls serving tea shivered valiantly without coats so to display their costumes, although Mlle. Marie Therese de Laboulaye, daughter of the Ambassador of France and Mme. de Laboulaye, finally donned a rough tweed over her dress, a long, full skirted Paisley costume.

Among those who attended the opening yesterday were Mme. de Laboulaye, Mrs. Reeve Lewis, Mrs. Emory Scott Land, Mrs. Cresson Newbold, Mrs. Dan Olney, Miss Laura Harlan, Mrs. W. Meade Fletcher, who served tea; Mrs. John Russell, wife of Gen. Russell; Miss Eleanor Gittings, Mrs. Joseph Cotton, jr., and Mrs. Charles Talman.

Things That Make Women More Beautiful

Beautiful Glossy Hair May Be Obtained by Use of Scented, Invigorating Tonic.

By Mignon.

The Mignon who writes this column does not sell, indorse or manufacture any cosmetics.

THERE'S only one way to have beautiful hair, and that is to take perfect care of it. Of course, every woman knows that this means first to keep your hair beautifully clean. But so often there are many more things that you must do if your hair is to be startlingly lovely. Running a comb through it and dashing out of the house to work or to a party and visiting a hair dresser perhaps once a week simply will not bring the desired results.

I have discovered a so-called hair tonic which is chiefly, I think, something to scent and give life to the hair. It is not a brilliantine, and, so far as I can discover, has no oil in it, but I can say that it is excellent.

The fragrance is the old familiar one that is a cross between flowers and sandalwood. It's not a sweet flower odor, by any means, and it is not an oriental sandalwood, but it is my guess that if you use it whoever stands next to you at a party is not going to move away until he has to. It's the sort of scent you bask in—if you know what I mean—and it probably has more followers than most perfumes.

It comes in a bottle with a small hole in the top and you can shake it on your hair. It will make you feel a little bit like Cinderella starting for the ball. But the scent will be there when you get home. This is catalogued as a lotion, but the salespeople will tell you it is a hair tonic. I wouldn't know who to believe and I don't know that it makes much difference because the lotion is a real find.

Child Apology For Rudeness Is Essential

Reason, However, Should Be Explained If Arguing Is Basic Cause.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

Sarah was sent home from school with instructions not to return until she was willing to apologize to the English teacher. Her mother soon found that the chances of Sarah's returning at all were slight, since the child was determined not to apologize.

The quarrel concerned a matter of fact. Sarah was right, but in arguing with the teacher had been very rude. Eventually the mother and the principal consulted, and Sarah was permitted to apologize—not for disagreeing with the teacher, but for her rudeness.

Resents Forced Apology.

Very often in the excitement of the contest a teacher or parent will fail to explain to the child the reason for the apology. The child, knowing that he was right regarding the fact in question, and the teacher wrong, quite naturally resents being made to apologize. He thinks that the apology is because he disagreed with the teacher in the first place, and feels that it means recanting and so undoing his victory.

He must be made to understand that, right or wrong, his rudeness was not permissible, and that it is for the manner not the matter of his statements that he must express his regrets. If this is made clear to him and he is not afraid of public humiliation, he is pretty sure to see the justice of the demand and do the right thing.

Apt to Be Annoyed.

Adults, and especially teachers, are very apt to be annoyed when they are proven wrong in their statements by a child. This in itself makes for trouble in the home and classroom. If instead of trying to argue the matter out, they at once refer it to the reference shelf, much useless and heated discussion might be avoided.

It is no disgrace to be wrong, and the child should be given full credit if he wins the point.

'Sitting Around' Dress Is Novelty of Season

A new fashion for this season is the "sitting around dress" for the young miss who doesn't go in for active sports. The characteristic of these dresses is that their identity is basically sports in terms of a simple, unencumbered silhouette, though a little more leeway in tricks of necklines and sleeves gives them a distinction that takes them out of the strictly casual type. Also there is a definite emphasis on color.

They Have Introduced Chic in Radio

By Frances Mangum.

NOW RADIO has its list of "best dressed women," too. According to the Fashion Academy of New York, they are Jane Pickens, N. B. C. soloist and member of the Pickens trio: Harriet Hilliard, singer on Ozzie Nelson's program, and Jessica Dragonette who also holds the title of Radio Queen of 1935.

Miss Pickens was chosen for dressing in typical American good taste, for wearing clothes appropriate to every occasion and for showing much originality in dress. She is very fond of color combinations such as black and white, blue and white and brown and white. Her favorite hats are wide brimmed and decidedly feminine.

Miss Hilliard Perfect Type.

Miss Hilliard's leading fashion virtues include a perfect fashion figure (tall and extremely slender), excellent grooming and a flair for wearing advance styles. She was adjudged by Nils T. Granlund, authority on feminine pulchritude, as the "perfect example of showgirl beauty." She is 5 feet 5 inches tall, weighs 116 pounds.

In her opinion, black and white are the two outstanding colors for evening wear. She prefers her black dresses on slinky, sophisticated lines, and her white dresses exactly opposite.

Miss Dragonette has made a definite link between fashions and radio. She was the first artist to dress formally for evening broadcasts—and now it's the rule rather than exception. Her gowns are specially designed to fit each of her concerts. This year she actually went a step further and changed her costume during a broadcast. Her first appearance was made in wine-red taffeta and blue tulle for "Song of India;" her second in an Alice blue gown for the song of the same name.

Prefers Grecian Lines.

Miss Dragonette's favorite frocks are designed on Grecian lines in soft pastel colors.

The whole idea of choosing a best dressed list from radio ranks is new this year and reflect the growing fahion consciousnss of the radio stars.

Now that they have studio audiences, and cameramen popping into their path at unexpected moments, the air wave girls are forced to be almost as concerned about their dress as movie stars.

3 Dresses Called Vital in Wardrobe Of Limited Cost

Three dresses constitute the backbone of the wardrobe a woman on limited income should choose for herself, says Miss Bebe Daniel, motion picture actress. These are:

Navy or black simple tailored dress whose appearance can be changed by varying belts, buckles, cuffs, and collars; a tailored suit, and for evening a white evening formal frock because it is nearly always becoming.

Miss Daniel (in private life, Mrs. Ben Lyon) is a strong believer in color psychology. She maintains every woman should wear the colors that make her happy rather than those regarded as becoming. She herself will never wear black or very bright reds, greens and blues because they depress her.

Sexes Now Disregard Contrasts in Clothes

In contrast to the old days when a knight wore his lady's colors in the jousting field, a girl now matches her blouses and suits to those of her "boy friend." If a husband has a tweed, flannel or linen suit, so may his wife. Even her hat strongly resembles his, be it felt or straw.

MARY HAWORTH Says:

Two Correspondents Assume Counselor's Role Today, One With Advice for Girls; Another With Advice for Youmg Men.

COLUMNIST'S NOTE: By way of variety, I am yielding the counselor's role today to two correspondents, one of whom has advice to give to young girls; the other of whom has advice to give to young men. Their letters are offered without further comment. M. H.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: The letter from "Seventy" in Wednesday's paper suddenly made me realize that my own girlhood experiences may be of some help to other girls. I was 16 when I went to a school of art, where a deal of promiscuous love-making was considered the thing. At least, the girls who engaged in such love-making thought they were being sports and the men didn't mind. But being only 16 and considered a child I often stood by whilst these men discussed the "good sports" among themselves. And I got the distinct impression that they were held very cheaply behind their backs, although, of course, they were flattered to their faces.

* * * *

My later experiences only confirmed that early impression. Although stand-offish, self-conscious and prudish girls are not liked, a natural, companionable girl who refuses to submit easily to love-making is always liked and respected. And it is the girl who has to take a definite stand in such matters. For despite the fact that tradition has made much of the thrill of the chase in romance, no man is going to refuse what falls into his lap—unless, indeed, he is very fastidious.

* * * *

So I made a rule for myself that no matter how strongly attracted I might be to a man, and regardless of the prevailing attitude toward such things, I would not permit love-making unless the man had shown definitely by word and action that he was seriously interested in me. The girl who takes this stand is less likely to be duped. For the insincere suitor is frightened away, whilst the nice man, although he may feel a little foolish at being snubbed, values such integrity and the chance it gives him for realizing and defining his own position. Easy intimacy leads to promiscuity and promiscuity leads to all the muddle-headed relationships one reads about in newspaper headlines.

* * * *

My advice to young girls, therefore, is to be natural and friendly with men but to reserve one's kisses for the man who wishes to marry.

Sincerely, HAPPY WIFE.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Today (April 16) I noted a question and answer in your column in regard to a young man who signed himself "Southerner." His seems to be a question which many young men of this day and age are asking. A similar question was asked you on April 7 by "Philosopher." The question runs: "Where can I find a girl who does not smoke or drink and one who is intelligent and fairly good looking?" Indeed, it is a very important question which more young men would do well to consider.

* * * *

I would like to give to Southerner and to any other similarly minded young man in the District of Columbia or elsewhere in our United States of America a tip of the utmost value; an honest, instructive suggestion as to just where to find the largest groups of such type girls.

* * * *

In the District of Columbia, they may be found at the Washington Sanitarium and Hospital, at Takoma Park, Md. There are nurses and undergraduate nurses, and across the campus from the Sanitarium may be found approximately 300 girls of the same type, studying and preparing themselves for many professions in life. There are several like institutions located throughout the United States and the world, upholding the highest standards for both men and women.

* * * *

These girls are so different from the ordinary run of girls that it is surprising indeed as one becomes acquainted with them . . . These girls do not smoke, drink, attend popular shows, dance or play cards. This is quite a statement to make, yet it can be proven true. Most of them are exceptionally intelligent and very accomplished. They like the best in art and music; they swim, hike, play tennis and ride.

* * * *

Another tip, young men: If you desire to meet any of these young ladies and make the slightest impression, or any impression at all, do this: Just leave your cigarettes at home. If you have had a drink of whiskey within the past 24 hours you had better wait a couple of days before seeking an introduction. If these girls find out you drink you had best go on your way. They will never see you again. You had better go prepared to discuss some uplifting subject intelligently, instead of raving about your last high ball or love affair.

* * * *

I hope, Miss Haworth, you will find it convenient to publish this letter in whole or in part for the benefit of those who have written you in regard to such matters. I am not endeavoring to advertise this institution. The statements above are simple facts and anyone in Washington who knows the institution will corroborate my statement.

Sincerely, SYMPATHETIC READER.

Mary Haworth.

Home Economics and Commercial Art Training Can Usually Win a Girl a Job

Professional Women's Group to Discuss Problem at Meeting Today.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

JOBS MAY COME and jobs may go. Women wage earners may be replaced with men even in fields formerly reserved for the distaff side, such as teaching and dressmaking. But even in times of unemployment, the girl with a background of training in home economics and commercial art can always find employment. If she also has initiative and imagination, opportunities in the modern business world are boundless.

Because of the increasing number of positions for women in modern art occupations, the Institute of Women's Professional Relations is devoting its second conference, which opens in New York this morning, to this subject.

Mrs. Chase Going Woodhouse, director, told about the conference when she was in Washington recently as the guest of Mrs. Jouett Shouse, chairman of the institute's board of directors.

Hope to Find New Fields.

"Through recent research we have discovered that girls who have home economics and art training can always find employment," she said. "Through roundtable discussions of the same type as were conducted at our conference last year, we hope to discover, this year, exactly what positions are open in the art field, and what requirements they involve."

She further explained this conference—held under the auspices of the Institute of Women's Professional Relations in co-operation with the American Woman's Association—has been arranged for students and recent alumnae of colleges, universities and art schools; for counselors, deans and teachers and for men and women engaged in art industry.

"It is our hope that discussions will focus attention on demands of available jobs in art decoration, display, handicraft, lighting, photography, stage and costume and movie design, architecture, illustration and fashion designing," Mrs. Woodhouse continued. "We are particularly interested in pointing out overcrowded lines of employment in commercial art fields and in showing ways in which educational programs can be more closely related to employment problems facing college graduates."

Many Noted Speakers.

A distinguished list of persons successful in art work will be in charge of each round table conducted today. The one on fashion, for example, will be led by Miss Elizabeth Hawes, one of the most widely known young designers on this side of the Atlantic. Dressmaking, pattern design, shoes and hats and other accessories will be discussed in detail in relation to opportunities for women in these fields.

Mrs. Polly Pettit will direct a round-table on "Art in Display" emphasizing chances for art-trained women as counter and window decorators, and in advertising display work.

Other round-table discussions to be held at the conference today will be: "Art in Decoration" led by Mrs. Francis Lenygon; "Floristry and Floral Decoration" directed by Robert Lemmon, managing editor of "House and Garden;" "Handicrafts," by William D. Phelps; "Photography," by H. I. Williams; "Stage Design" by Lee Simonson; "Architecture" by Eleanor Le Maire; "Illustration," by Gordon Aymar and "Product Design," which will take in package styling (a recent development in the jobs-for-women field) and even the designing of automobile bodies, a line of work which trained women are now also finding employment.

Among the outstanding persons conducting round-table discussions York is Polly Petit, above, of the New York School of Display, who at the Conference on Art Occupations in Industry today in New will talk on jobs for women as counter and window decorators.

Douglas Fairbanks' Wife Picks Style Show Dress

One of the models which Victor Stiebel, London designer, created for a style show to be given in this country in June, has been selected by Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks. It is a cocktail dinner dress of ground length in royal blue shantung with V neck and revers. It has a tailored appearance and short sleeves coming just above the elbow. Worn with it is a bright orange stock scarf having yellow and green spots. Also, a belt of the same material.

Largest Blue Diamond Owned by Peggy Joyce

Peggy Hopkins Joyce has the distinction of possessing the largest blue diamond in the world. When mined, it weighed 325 carats and was a companion stone to the largest diamond in the world, owned by the British crown. After it was cut as an emerald gem, it weighed 140 carats. (The average diamond in an engagement ring weighs one carat). In color, it is an unusual opalescent blue and is practically an inch square. Miss Joyce wears it on a dog collar around her neck.

Scientific Study Is Held Retarded By Dyeing of Hair

Artificially waved and dyed hair is just one of the many obstacles confronting the scientist in his search for truth about man's natural development, according to an article by Dr. Harley N. Gould, of Tulane University, in the current issue of the American Journal of Physical Anthropology.

In making a study of 200 southern women of old American stock, Dr. Gould found himself in the embarrassing position of having to ask the women if they had waved or dyed their hair. So truth, crushed to earth, rose again—and Dr. Gould found that about six out of every ten women studied had naturally straight hair. Hair form is one of the characteristics from which anthropologists draw their conclusions in their study of the "science of man."

Turned up noses were about twice as common in this group of women as were "hooked" noses. Half of the group had straight noses.

The French group of the old stock American women averaged the smallest, while those with British ancestry averaged the largest. Blue eyes were almost as common in the French group as in the British.

Style Tips.

Glazed chintz culottes for bicycling.

Bright cherries for your black straw hat and a bracelet made of matching cherries.

Two jabots, one of starched pique, the other of eyelet organdy or lace, made to fasten by hook and eye down the front of your navy blue silk crepe, and make it either tailored or dressy.

Instead of the jacket evening dress, one with a tunic coat. The dress a solid color, the tunic print. Or vice versa.

SUBSTITUTE SWEETHEART

By Priscilla Wayne

Although her brother, Jerry, forbade her to do it, Ruth Dayton, 18, has accepted a job posing as June Bradley, step-sister of Jim Bradley, wealthy young Chicagoan, who is Ruth's age and who Ruth resembles greatly. Ruth had been persuaded to accept the job by Joe and Clara Bradley, uncle and aunt of Jim, in whose charge June has been placed by her brother.

Ruth had been persuaded by Joe and Clara that their purpose in hiring her was a humane one. June, they told her, was ill and could not go with them to the bedside of Jim, who had been blinded and apparently fatally injured in an auto accident. The deceit, she was told, was to soften the last hours of a dying man.

But in Chicago Ruth has found herself in the midst of a plot. She is convinced that Joe and Clara and Pascoe, the man nurse they establish in charge of Jim, are eager to bring about Jim's death. Ruth falls in love with Jim and he with her, thinking she is June. He has Joe arrange their marriage so June will inherit his estate if he dies, but the marriage Joe arranges is a fake one.

Ruth cannot confide her fears to Jim, who is too ill. She is held prisoner by the Bradleys and Pascoe. Only Bette, Mrs. Bradley's maid, seems inclined to help her. When she has almost given up hope, Ruth sees her brother, Jerry, who has obtained work in the household as houseman. Jerry obtains the confidence of Bette, who tells him what is going on.

CHAPTER TWENTY-ONE.

LOCKED in her room, late afternoon, Ruth had her first communication from Jerry. It came in the shape of a note quickly thrust under the door.

Ruth ran over to the door, caught the note up, read it hastily.

She decided afterward that the note had saved her sanity. The communication was brief, characteristically Jerry.

"Destroy this as soon as you've read it. I have the lowdown here. Keep perfectly quiet. Talk to no one. Will try to get out to summon help late afternoon. If not, we'll make the break at night. Be dressed and ready at all times."

Soon afterward Pascoe permitted her to leave her room long enough to go down the corridor and make a very brief call on Jim. He had taken a sudden turn for the worse. He lay back on the pillows and it seemed to Ruth that he fairly gasped for breath.

Once she though that Jim recognized her. Again she was certain that he did not.

"He begged to see you. That's why I came for you. Now he doesn't even know that you're here," Pascoe said unfeelingly.

Ruth caught at Pascoe's arm. "Tell me when he got this way. Tell me."

"This was coming to him three days ago. He was a dying man then," Pascoe said. "You should worry, sweetie, you weren't really married to him, anyway. That was just a bluff to make him feel a little better and it didn't do you any harm. Anyway, you're provided for."

Ruth cringed away from him. That look in his eyes, the satisfied smirk on his face as he grinned at her told the girl more clearly than words exactly what he meant.

"We'll get away from here tomorrow. I don't wonder you're weak in the knees. I am myself. It's got on my nerves, too."

"Feel that way about me, huh?" Pasco laughed. "Well, you won't in a few days, I promise you that."

There was a quick step at the doorway. They turned. Dr. McGuire was there. But he was scarcely seeing the two. His quick, professional eyes noted only the man on the bed.

The Finish.

He crossed the room in two strides. "How long has this been going on?"—to Pascoe.

Pasce shrugged. "An hour or so. Looks like we're coming up to the finish," he came over nonchalantly, stood at the foot of the bed.

So quickly that Ruth could scarcely believe it had happened, McGuire's fist shot out, struck Pascoe full in the face, sent him spinning across the room to the floor.

But Ruth was not watching Pascoe. Only the swiftly graying face of the man she loved.

"Help," Dr. McGuire said. It was a command. He had off his coat. He had opened his medicine case. Swiftly, with sure and practiced hands, he was fingering a hypodermic. "There's one chance," he muttered. "One chance."

Ruth did not ask what he planned. Instinct told her that the physician at her side was working like a madman to save Jim's life. Whatever he had done in the past, however he had been implicated in the Bradleys' heinous plot, there was no mistaking his eagerness, his determination now.

He breathed just a little deeper himself when it seemed apparent that his patient was breathing more deeply. He wiped the great beads of perspiration from his face and sighed in relief as a bit of color returned to the sick man's blanched lips.

"He'll make it. He'll make it," he kept muttering to himself. "He's got to make it."

"Yes. Yes," Ruth begged

"It's like urging a tired horse up a very steep hill," the physician said thoughtfully, almost to himself.

His eyes had a strange, triumphant light. His smile reflected anguish and hope as he bent over Jim, listened to his heart, knew that the sick man struggled back to life. "He's making the grade."

Pascoe moaned, stirred a little. Like a madman, Dr. McGuire rushed across the room to him, struck him full in the face, blow after blow. Made sure that he couldn't get up.

Ruth shuddered at the ferocity of this attack and yet she gloated in it. Her arms were around Jim. She was certain that he breathed more easily now. Sure now that her eyes did not deceive her and that a touch of color flooded into his chalklike face.

McGuire was putting on his coat swiftly. He closed the medicine bag, set it on the floor at the foot of the bed.

"I'll not need it," he muttered, more to himself than to Ruth.

"Please don't go now. Please don't," Ruth begged. "If he gets up," indicating Pascoe, "if the Bradleys come?"

"They won't come. They're out walking. They left Pascoe here alone. I watched them go."

"What do you mean to do?" Ruth begged.

"I've got my car out here. I'm going down to police headquarters and summon help. I'm going to give myself up. I'll send medical help here. The doctor will know—any doctor will know when he sees that"—he indicated the table where Pascoe kept his medicines—"when he sees that he'll know what's happened here.

"I tried to stave it off. God knows I did, but they had me in their power. It wasn't any use. Any help I gave Bradley when I came, Pascoe counteracted when I left. He's a fiend."

Trapped.

Ruth knew that she faced a man who was almost wild with fear. He must keep that idea in his head. To go at once and inform the authorities. To send help. To get away before the Bradleys returned.

She tried to tell him this. "Please go. Please. Quickly."

"I will. You'll stay here by him?"

"I'll stay by him. Please go."

"I think he'll come along all right now," McGuire found coherence enough to comfort. "He's got a constitution like iron."

Ruth watched McGuire cross the room. His face was deathly pale, his eyes like smoldering coals of fire in their sockets. She heard him go down the stairs—and then, her heart sinking, heard the voice of Joseph Bradley on the stairway.

She rushed to the door, her idea, if her frenzied mind had formed an idea, to help Dr. McGuire get away.

"Where are you going?" Bradley's voice was very calm.

From over the railing Ruth could hear Joseph Bradley—Clara Bradley just behind.

"None of your business," McGuire answered, attempting to brush past the other man.

"Some of my business," Joseph Bradley answered in the dead level, fearfully calm voice Ruth had learned to fear. "What's happened upstairs?"

"I've hurt your precious Pascoe. I hope to heaven I kicked the life out of him."

"Where's Jim, has anything happened?"

"No."

"Get back there. Make it happen. I'm fed up on this stalling around. Pascoe said you'd been double-crossing him. I didn't believe him. Now I do."

"If double-crossing Pascoe, if double-crossing all of you means getting out of this hellish business, then I'm double-crossing the whole world."

"Say, listen, you fool," Joseph Bradley hissed. "Do you realize what this means? Giving poison to a man isn't any little dope-ring business. You might get a few years for peddling dope, but you'll hang for poisoning a man."

McGuire lunged back to strike Bradley. Clara Bradley cringed against the wall. Ruth screamed as she saw the flash of a gun in Joe Bradley's hand.

One shot. McGuire crumpled, his body in a heap, hesitated for one fearful instant and then plunged down the rest of the stairway, arms and legs extended horribly.

Whipped by a sudden mad determination, Ruth rushed back into Jim Bradley's room. She closed the great door on its smooth swinging hinges, locked and bolted it, rushed then to the adjoining room to cut off by bolts and locks any other entrance into the room.

Joseph Bradley was pounding on the door demanding emphatically that she open it.

But Ruth was not listening. She was madly dialing a number—the police call she had memorized days before for just this mad opportunity.

Raw Vegetables Make a Crisp, Snappy Salad

Turnips, Cauliflower Blossoms and Even Uncooked Squash Add Zest.

By Dorothea Duncan.

Crisp, crinkly and full of snap! This is the manner in which salads are billed in this season's forecast for spring fashions in food. Raw vegetables have been adopted as the main salad theme. Crisp greens—chicory, dandelion, water cress, romaine, endive, lettuce—are as popular as ever, but to this glowing army of ingredients, the housewife now adds every conceivable vegetable, and serves them raw.

Young garden turnips—either yellow or white—are especially popular in an all-raw vegetable combination served with French dressing. They may be cut in slender match-like straws, or lattice fashion, if you are interested in creating a decorative effect.

Raw Squash, Too.

Tender young squash, too, has been accepted raw as a summer salad ingredient. Either the small, yellow crooked neck variety or the white scalloped edged ones lend a delicious flavor to the mixed vegetable salad.

Cauliflower blossoms, tender, small ones, may be served raw, if you have the courage. They make an admirable nosegay for the center of a vegetable salad platter. If, however, you prefer them cooked, be sure to have them "just done," never overcook, lest the color and flavor become unattractive and mar the snap and jest of your salad.

Women have long since discarded that old superstition which led them to believe that cucumbers must be salted down before eating to remove the poisonous juice found near the skin. A wilted, salt-ridden cucumber is no longer in favor. Some housewives even serve cucumber rings without peeling, for they know the surface of the vegetable near the skin is full of valuable minerals. Then, too, the pale cucumber flesh is more attractive for the deep outer edge of green provided by the skin.

Carrots Provide Color.

Carrots have been served raw in salads for many a moon, but that does not make them any the less popular this season. Grate them and use as a garnish for an otherwise pale salad, slice them paper thin or cut julienne fashion, for a mixed vegetable combination, or dice them and add to fruit cubes—pineapple, grapefruit, apples, etc.

Salads have been chosen as an important part of the week-end menus for this week. Saturday's dinner, in fact, calls for a help-yourself-salad that serves as the piece de resistance. The vegetables used in this salad are raw. They are arranged in little groups about a large green-decked platter in such a fashion as to make it simple for every member of the family to serve himself. Both French and mayonnaise dressing accompany this type of salad in separate bowls.

Plan to serve your salad on a large round serving platter. Make the center vegetable group one of tiny cauliflower blossoms nested in chopped hearts of spinach leaves. Then arrange the other vegetables in radiating panels, spoke-like from the heart of the platter. Use crisp stalks of romaine as a background for such vegetables as demand a green to set them off. Cresents of avocado, unpeeled cucumber circles, sliced tomatoes, and yellow turnips cut with a potato cutter in lattice effect will make an attractive platter to greet the eye and please the palate.

Peace Sympathizers To Wear 'Pax' Print

The newest kink in prints are those marked with the letters P-A-X (Pax being the Latin word for peace). These unusual and strikingly attractive designs are sponsored by the Women's International League for Peace and are gotten out in connection with the forthcoming Emergency Peace Campaign as a means by which all peace sympathizers can recognize each other.

They are made up in nine or ten different patterns, each of course featuring "Pax," and in a variety of colors.

Salads Important Feature of Week-End Menus

Even manufacturers of table accessories have realized the important place attained by salads on spring menus. Here you find crisp lettuce, shrimp, asparagus and sliced hard cooked egg—one of spring's favorite combination salads—reclining against the very latest in table novelty, a crescent shaped salad dish.

One-Dish Meal Needs Balance In Food Choice

Must Contain Proteins, Green Vegetable and Starchy Element.

IT MAY sound a bit lazy to praise easy food preparations, but it's really just good sense. To save yourself dishes to wash, and time of preparation, there's nothing quite so perfect as a one-dish meal.

If the weather is cool make it a hot dish casserole combination, or for warm weather it may turn into a cold salad.

The basis for a successful meal in one dish is a balanced selection of foods. It must contain meat for protein, a starchy or filling food like potatoes, macaroni, noodles, rice; and a green or succulent vegetable. Some milk is also a good addition to the balanced food plan.

Next thing to be sure of is a perfect flavor combination, and a consistency that is neither too dry nor too moist; too coarse nor too fine.

Use Imagination.

You can use your imagination to excellent advantage in planning these combination dishes. Suppose you have a few lima beans left over from last night's dinner. There aren't enough for a whole meal, so you add an equal quantity of whole grain corn or tomatoes and some bacon or Vienna sausages for the meat. Hunt out some bits of onion, green pepper or chopped parsley to give it a delicate touch and you have a masterpiece of flavor.

The sauce which is used to combine and moisten most casserole dishes is delightful when made from half vegetable stock and half evaporated milk, or half stock and half rich milk. Season it with salt, pepper, a bit of dry mustard and a teaspoon of Worcestershire sauce if available. This takes it out of the class of the usual sauce.

Any cold left over meat, like veal, lamb, beef or ham makes an excellent meat foundation for these dishes. But the canned meats and sausages should come in for their share in these combinations as well. Vienna sausage, frankfurters, boiled ham, luncheon roll, corned beef, salami, are some of the favorites for this use.

Favored Combinations.

Some favorite hot combinations are:

Ham and squash.
Potatoes, corn and frankfurters.
Noodles, ham and mushrooms.
Lima beans, tomatoes and bacon.
Macaroni, tomatoes and corned beef.
Corn, green limas and Vienna sausages.

Some favorite cold combinations are:

Macaroni, corned beef and celery.
Lettuce, water cress and cold sausage cubes.
Potato salad with celery, cucumber and salami.
Peas, celery and ham.

Vienna Sausage Escallop.

1 cup green lima beans
1 cup whole kernel corn
1 9-ounce can Vienna sausage
1 pimiento
1½ cups medium white sauce
Seasoning

Cut sausages in short lengths. Place layer of beans in casserole, cover with sausage, add corn mixed with pimiento. Cover with sauce made of 3 tablespoons butter, 3 tablespoons flour and 1½ cups of milk (use vegetable liquid as part of milk). Cover with crumbs, and bake 30 minutes in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.).

Macaroni Corned Beef Salad.

1 can corned beef
2 cups cooked macaroni
6 sweet pickles
1 green pepper.
1 cup celery

Open chilled can of corned beef and remove beef whole. Cut in small cubes and mix with cooked macaroni, sliced celery, chopped pickles and pepper. Mix with enough mayonnaise to moisten and heap into salad bowl lined with lettuce.

Use macaroni which is curved and cut into short lengths.

Veal and Ham Pot Pie, Quick Crust.

2 cups cubes ham
2 cups cubed cooked veal
½ cup peas
1 pimiento
¼ cup ham drippings
¼ cup flour
2 cups milk
Salt, pepper and Worcestershire sauce

Make a gravy by melting the ham fat, stirring in the flour, then the milk. When thickened add chopped pimiento, vegetable and cubed meat. Season to taste with salt, pepper and Worcestershire sauce. Place in round baking dish. Cover with pie shaped pieces of buttered bread. Lay pimiento strips between. Bake 30 to 35 minutes in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.).

'Cutlet' Is Fashioned Of Cottage Cheese

Here is a quickly prepared luncheon snack that will add just the right contrast to a crisp, spring-like salad. The recipe was awarded honorable mention last week in The Post's contest for cottage cheese recipes.

Cottage Cheese Cutlet.

1 egg yolk
2 tablespoons sugar (add more, if desired)
Dash of cinnamon and pinch of salt

Mash the cottage cheese fine and mix with sugar and cinnamon, salt and egg yolk. Place this mixture between saltines (about one rounded tablespoon on a cracker and cover with another). Dip these sandwiches in a well-beaten egg and fry until golden brown on both sides in butter.

436 Emerson street northwest.

Pickled Canned Peaches.

One No. 2½ can peach halves, ½ cup sugar, ½ cup vinegar, 1 cup peach juice, 2 teaspoons whole cloves, 1 stick cinnamon. Cook sugar, vinegar, peach juice and spices five minutes. Add peaches and heat to boiling point. Cover and let stand until cool. Put in jar and let stand 24 to 48 hours before using.

English Lunch Proves Popular 'Snack Party'

A snack party might be any kind where your guests stand about nibbling delicious tidbits. One of the most delightful forms the snack party is taking is that of an English lunch. Many women agree that this is the smartest way to entertain before bridge.

The luncheon is served buffet style. A large table is used with doilies or runners and a simple floral decoration for adornment. The sandwiches and tidbits should be arranged on large trays—with salad arranged in nests of lettuce in individual portions. There should be a tray of relishes, chilled tomato juice or fruit juices, a choice of coffee or tea, and for dessert, salted nuts, stuffed prunes, dates, figs, and some enticing candies interestingly arranged.

Large crisp potato chips spread with Roquefort cheese and topped lightly with caviar are delicious; stuffed celery is always a favorite. Try serving it this way: Blend Roquefort cheese, minced broiled bacon and chopped sweet pickle. Use mixture for stuffing celery hearts.

Chipped beef rolls are attractive, too. To prepare: Select a large slice of chipped beef, spread with Roquefort cheese mixed with Worcestershire sauce. Roll tightly and chill. Cut the roll into thirds to serve.

Iowans Plan Dance.

The Iowa State Society of Washington will have a reception and dance at the Willard Hotel on Thursday, May 14. The guest of honor and speaker will be John W. Studebaker, Commisisoner of Education. There will be dancing from 10 to 1. Miss Gertrude M. Louis, of the Roosevelt Hotel, is secretary of the society.

Hair Styles Simpler.

Hair styles are simpler this season. There are fewer masses of ringlets, and all of them off the neck at back. There seems to be a general inclination toward brushing one's tresses away from the face except in the instance of the gay ninety bangs.

Heels of Shoes Get Interesting Design

No longer is the front of one's shoe to have all the design interest. This season's mode demands interesting treatment for heels. One new style, which has aroused much comment, has a heel which, when viewed from the back is little more than an inch in width, but its length front to back is double, so that the foot gets adequate support.

Study of Stars Is Revealing

WHAT a cool, indifferent girl Nina is! Yet she's attractive to men. Just now she's driving Jerry into a rage by that undemonstrative air of hers.

Maybe he'd be less puzzled if he knew that Nina was born in the astrological House of Taurus, which rules from April 20 to May 20.

"Still waters run deep" is the rule for those born in that house. They are warm and human, strong and tenacious, but not very expressive. They show their affection in practical ways, but don't put it into words.

Steady and reliable are these Taurians, excellent managers, doting parents, and far more domestic than romantic. In fact, they should take care not to let their common sense drive romance out the window.

They'd best choose a life partner from the houses of Virgo (August 21-September 20) or Capricorn (December 21-January 20).

Intriguing, isn't it, to see what the stars have to say about you and your friends! It's always good fun at a party, and surprising how well "the shoe fits."

It is so easy to check up on your starry fate with the clear explanation provided in our 40-page illustrated booklet. So simply written that it's not too deep for you to grasp the fundamentals of this ancient lore. A handy-size guide, crammed full of entertaining character sketches and gentle "cracks" at our human foibles.

Maple Sirup For Children's Cereal Urged

Recipe for Pudding Given With Sap to Be Used for Sweetening.

Of all the delicacies that man has appropriated from Mother Nature—for the delight of his sense of taste—pure maple sap sirup is one of the most highly prized of all because of its unique and exquisite flavor which defies all imitation. Distinctly American in origin — bequeathed to the white man by the Indians of New England—it ranks as one of the great contributions of our country to the cuisine of the world.

Pure maple sap sirup is derived solely from the running sap of the sugar maple tree, concentrated from that carefully collected running sap by evaporation. This is the only way in which the real, natural maple sap sirup can be prepared. From 40 to 50 pounds of maple sap are needed to make one gallon of sirup that weighs 11 pounds.

Here is a tip for mothers, if your child does not like cooked cereals. Let him use maple sirup instead of sugar for sweetening. It will provide a flavor that he cannot resist.

Maple sirup is slightly sweeter than sugar for cooking and therefore, it is not necessary to use as much of it in order to produce the same degree of sweetness. Nuts, particularly the rich oily ones, such as hickory, walnut or butternut, blend well with its flavor.

Here is a recipe for a dessert pudding which is considerably improved by the use of maple sirup. Try it the next time you entertain. The two-color effect will add a gay touch to your meal.

Maple Cream Dessert.

1 cup milk
1 cup maple sirup
2 eggs, beaten
2 tablespoons plain gelatin
½ cup cold water
½ pint whipping cream
½ cup chopped dates
¼ cup chopped nutmeats.

Soak the gelatin in the cold water until dissolved. Combine milk and maple sirup in top of double boiler, when hot add well-beaten eggs. Stir until slightly creamy. Add gelatin mixture. Set in cool place until firm. Beat gently with egg beater and add the nuts, dates and one-half of the cream that has been whipped. Divide mixture in two parts, to one add a drop or two of red or green vegetable coloring and stir until well blended. Serve equal parts of each mixture topped with the remaining whipped cream and a colored cherry. Serves 8.

Honey Recipes Asked Of Contest Entrants

Housewives are reawakening to the possibilities afforded by honey as a sweetening in cooking. Remembering that honey was at one time the only sweetening available and therefore must have been used freely in making foods more palatable, the woman who is looking for a new taste thrill for her family has found it in the many honey recipes that have for years lay hidden between the covers of some ancient cook book.

This new interest in honey has determined the theme of The Post's recipe contest for next week. Honey recipes are requested, so enter your favorite one in The Post's contest next week. Cash awards will be made for the five best recipes. First prize will be $5; second prize, $3, and the three remaining prizes, $1 each.

To enter this contest merely write out your favorite honey recipe and send it to Dorothea Duncan in care of The Washington Post. Mail your recipe in time to reach this office not later than next Saturday.

The jaunty, deep-brim hat is quickly crocheted in guimpe, its brim in rib stitch, with the same stitch repeated in the purse flap. A braided cord trims both hat and purse.

Flee to Farm In Leap Year, Men Advised

Women Called Urbanites by Nature, Held More Numerous in Cities.

By the Associated Press.

Uraban, Ill., April 25.—Turn ploughboy for the season and spend leap year on the farm, was Prof. E. T. Hiller's advice today to bachelors who want to stay that way during 1936.

The leap year chase is most strenuous in the city, the sociologist said, "because there are a couple of unmarried women for every unmarried urban male.

The ratio holds for all cities, the University of Illinois professor declared in reporting on a survey of "organization of population."

Women form the greatest part of the population in communities under 100,000, the report asserted, but even in suburban and country areas "women seek the urban and men the rural part of each zone," he explained.

"The city has a higher ratio of unmarried women than the farm does, because the farm can dispense with its women more readily than with its men."

All cities follow the same pattern, Prof. Hiller said. The population curve always swings downward for a certain distance from the community's center, and then swings back up again.

The similarity extends to population per square mile, ratio of growth or decline, proportion of aged persons, division of sexes, ratio of native to foreign born, and even to land values.

Families with children like to live in rural areas next to the city, the report showed; elderly folks are centered in villages.

Black Vanquishes Pink for Evening

Black vanquishes the old-time favorite pink as the preferred color for feminine evening wear, according to the votes cast by 74 young men who teach dancing in some of New York's smartest academies, it was learned through a poll taken by Mademoiselle magazine.

Next most popular colors were white and red, followed by blue, turquoise, gray (surprising!) and brown. Green had four votes, yellow three, and pink wasn't mentioned at all.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

She is a well-known club woman and active in various civic projects. But, first of all, she is successful at her main job—that of being a mother. Her children are well behaved and industrious and make good grades in high school. Besides they're nice just as people. It goes without saying that her home is serene and well managed . . . we asked her once how she organized her life to encompass so many facets and do each job she undertook with credit.

"The only problem is within myself. I find that everything goes beautifully as long as I keep my head, try to be reasonable and count to 100 before flying off the handle," she smiled. This interested us, so we questioned her more.

"Oh, I mean just that," she insisted. "I have to strike a happy balance within myself between being watchful and exacting but not fussy or nagging. Then a big help in this respect is having a pleasant bedroom, where I can think things out in the thick of the day and get my perspective. That's why I have my room at the back of the house upstairs, more or less out of the fray."

We asked her if we might see that room . . . it ought to have something to tell if it meant that much to this woman. And it did, though not quite in the way we expected. We thought it would be a greatly restrained sort of room, but it was rather dashing in a tranquil, leisurely sort of way. The furniture was Chippendale mahogany, the walls in a lacey Chinese wall paper of robin's-egg blue and white, the draperies of scarlet over white silk gauze curtains. We understood what she meant about it, though . . . she enjoyed being here, and it had a certain detached air about it . . . along with an easy chair in peacock blue.

ADVISED TO EAT BRAN FOR HER CONSTIPATION*

Kellogg's ALL-BRAN Helps Miss Hanson

Read this enthusiastic, voluntary letter: "Just a line to let you know how much I appreciate Kellogg's ALL-BRAN. I was troubled with constipation.* I asked my doctor what to do. He said to eat bran.

"I tried other brands but they weren't so good, so I tried Kellogg's ALL-BRAN, and it is just wonderful. It makes delicious muffins, too."— Miss Agnes Hanson, 450 N. Cicero Ave., Chicago, Ill.

ALL-BRAN provides mild "bulk"—missing in the average meal. This delicious cereal also furnishes vitamin B and iron.

The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN absorbs moisture, and gently exercises and cleanses the system. It is often more effective than that found in fruits and vegetables, as it does not break down within the body. ALL-BRAN also supplies vitamin B and iron.

Sold by all grocers. ALL-BRAN is much more effective than part-bran products. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

Things and Stuff.

There is bitter irony in the Moose River cave-in . . . Two of the owners of the mine and one other man were trapped in the gold beds . . . I wonder if they thought of the fortune in gold ore within their reach, as rescuers struggled to get to them? . . . I doubt it . . . Gold at such a moment must be a yellow mockery, a promissory note with its tongue in its cheek . . . But on Broadway a lot of us trap ourselves in pits equally deep in everyday life, shut ourselves off from friendships, in our pursuit of gold . . . Forgetting what the trapped men learned—that when you most need help, you can't eat gold or drink it or even twist it to form the letters SOS.

LOMBARD.

Broadway waiters and captains, who work until 4 a. m., do not spend the rest of the day in bed . . . A captain at the Hollywood runs a famous bookstore, specializing in rare volumes . . . Paradise headwaiter Albert Berryman tinkers with outboard motors in the daytime . . . Waiter at the French Casino manages a Greek wrestler, but rarely can get time to see him in action . . . Stork Club busboy has a patent he is trying to market . . . Doorman at Jack Dempsey's teaches swimming in a local hotel pool, and in the summertime is a lifeguard . . . A chef at the St. Regis teaches a large afternoon class in French.

French Casino is one of the more exciting Broadway spots, with an atmosphere all its own . . . My favorite persons there are a girl and a boy . . . The boy sits behind a screen on the mezzanine floor, fondling a crystal ball into which he peers for his remarkable answers . . . All of us emerge from his secluded nook with puzzled looks on our classic profiles, because he will tell you the question which is uppermost in your mind and answer it . . . Len Hammond, of Fox Movietone, bet some of us that he could outwit the mind-reader . . . He concentrated on a question . . . "I'll write out the answer," said the mind-reader, and he wrote "Ethiopia" . . . Hammond's question was: "Where have I been for the past six months?" . . . Three Scotland Yard men, touring the town with Capt. Tom Dugan and Eddie Fitzgerald, followed Hammond into the youngster's nook . . . He told each of them the question he was thinking and gave each of them an accurate answer . . . He's terrific.

Equestrienne Cilly Feindt, a swell looker, is the girl who makes a white horse dance to the strains of the "Merry Widow Waltz" on the French Casino stage . . . And even makes him prance a rhumba and a polka . . . She does it all with pressure of legs and heels and reins . . . She has two white horses, which she brought from England, and it takes her a year to ready a horse for the stage . . . The secret, she says, is constant practice . . . In addition to 14 shows a week, she takes the horses every other day to Central Park and continues their training, so if you see a lady and a white horse doing pinwheels in the park, don't call for the police . . . It's quite all right.

Queue of girls outside the stage-door of Loew's State Theater, the past week, attests to the persistent fandom of Buddy Rogers . . . Small Income Is No Barrier To Marriages

Does the average young man steer clear of marriage because of a limited income?

Apparently not, according to figures which estimate a national hook-up of 1,000,000 couples per year, even during depression, and judging by the number of men escorting young women through the Bride's House decorated by House Beautiful at the Savoy Plaza Hotel, New York City.

Now that the spring and summer season for brides is in full swing indications point to a banner year for matrimony, and that a home will be built for every three marriages.

Discusses Change.

"Men and women are approaching marriage with a saner and sounder idea of constructively building from the ground up, especially those with a limited income," said Mrs. Ruth R. Tregenza, member of the Fine Arts Department at Teachers College of Columbia University and instructor in home furnishing.

Mrs. Tregenza has arranged a series of student tours through the Bride's House for the purpose of studying the decorative scheme and modern household conveniences shown in the ten-room exhibit. The tours are part of the home-furnishing course at this college.

Variation Desirable.

"People used to think luxury meant large and fat furniture and over-enthusiastic people are apt to gather too many exciting things. There should be continuity of thought which allows plenty of variation as shown in the Bride's House," said Mrs. Tregenza on her first visit to the model home.

"Young women today realize the necessity of knowing home-making from all angles for martrimonial serenity, namely the economical, social and spiritual—these qualities are more lasting than just a pretty face," is the belief of Mrs. Tregenza.

"City men" are taking more creative interest in their homes, according to this instructor. She thinks the idea started with the "rumpus" rooms, which have been popular the last few years.

"Let the man be creative—and why not—he will probably be witty and amusing," Mrs. Tregenza added.

Vacation House Of Steel, Glass Proves Unique

A "week-end house" built entirely without plaster is the latest development in building. This cottage designed by A. Lawrence Kocher, editor of an architectural magazine, and Albert Frey has many interesting features. It is supported by steel columns. Two of the four walls are made entirely of glass and it boasts an outside spiral stairway that leads to a canvas covered sun deck.

The raised living floor level gives a good view and provides space beneath for a two car shelter.

The framework is of wood and steel. Walls, roof and floors are insulated with aluminum foil. All angles of the house are rounded to facilitate stretching of canvas over the edges. The canvas covering replaces the usual shingles of clapboards utilized for the exterior.

An addition of tile construction, serves as a guest room. It is equiped with a fireplace.

The problem of furniture was met ingeniously. One innovation is a chair made of rubber which takes its comfortable shape when inflated. Unused, it occupies a modicum of space. The dining table is of glass with chromium supports. Other chairs are of steel and canvas.

All plumbing for bath and kitchen is concentrated in one spot as an economy measure. The entire cost, including plumbing, wiring and an electrically-driven pump for water, was $1,500.

Eggs Are Tasty Luncheon Dish

EGGS always form a pleasant main luncheon dish for hot weather menus. The following recipes submitted in last week's Post contest for egg dishes, while not prize winners, have been given honorable mention, and will surely be of interest to the woman who must serve luncheon at home every day.

Italian Eggs.

1 tablespoon minced onion
2 tablespoons melted fat
1 tablespoon minced parsley
2 cups tomato sauce
½ cup diced soft cheese
Salt to taste
4 eggs

Cook the onion in the melted fat until golden brown. Add all other ingredients except the eggs and stir constantly until the cheese is melted. Add the slightly beaten eggs, stir gently until eggs are set, then serve immediately on buttered toast.

By MRS. HENRY T. BOSWELL, 3833 Windom place northwest.

Eggs in Noodle-Mushroom Nests.

2 tablespoons butter
¼ pound fresh mushrooms or one small can
2 tablespoons flour
1½ cups milk
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
4 eggs

Cook noodles in boiling water until tender. Melt butter, fry mushrooms which have been washed, peeled and cut into quarters, for five minutes. Add flour, salt, pepper and mix well. Add milk and stir constantly until creamy and smooth. Drain noodles and arrange in baking dish, leaving four slight depressions in center. Pour mushroom sauce over noodles.

Break one egg into each depression. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and dot with butter. Set in moderate oven until eggs are set.

Is Milk a 'Must' Food on Your Child's Menus?

If the tall glass of plain milk that appears regularly at each meal is in present disfavor with the younger members of your family, try the same artful device of bringing it back into popularity as the mother of this chubby youngster did. Combine it with popular fruit juices and a bit of sugar, place in a shaker with cracked ice and shake until chilled and frothy.

Orange or Lemon Nogs Provide New Milk Recipes for Children

Alternatives to Chocolate as a Combination Element to Appeal to Youngsters Found Frequently Overlooked by Mothers.

Child Health Day comes but once a year by Presidential proclamation. But to mothers of small children it is every day, and May 1 is only its official recognition.

Every woman realizes that the health and security of her children are essential to the well-being of the Nation. Health agencies, both public and private, realize this too, and they know that the primary essentials in maintaining child health begin at home. Today there are many organizations, clinics and other organizations that endeavor to help mothers with the many problems of child feeding.

Correct growth-promoting and disease-resisting diets have been the main topic of child health for years, but now a new wrinkle has entered the discussion. Many women are well-versed in the art of pureeing spinach and calculating adequate diets for their youngsters, but they have failed to make this very food attractive enough to induce the children to partake of it.

A Chief Topic.

The art of getting children to eat is a chief topic among young mothers today. The old slogan "It is good for you, dear," is not enough to convince children that they must eat something that does not appeal to their eye, and certainly if the food set before them has no eye appeal, they are not interested in finding out if it might tempt their palates. The idea that "the proof of the pudding is in the eating of the pudding" is true only if the food first proves itself to the eye.

Milk is one food that is a "must" in the growing child's diet. But that very "must" often makes it unattractive to the child. Milk for breakfast, for luncheon and again for dinner. Would mother approve this part of the meal for herself? It is variety that keeps the menu attractive for the child as well as the adult.

A child is just as curious to try new dishes as are his elders. He will look intently with a glimmer of eagerness in his eyes at a new dessert. It may not be a new recipe but merely the old pudding formula in a bright pudding dish, dressed with a topping of golden brown meringue. His eye has been pleased and if this much has been accomplished, you can be sure that he will go after the contents of the dish with delighted haste.

So it is with milk. A new guise now and then for this important food will make it the most popular one in the child's estimation.

Other Foods Desirable.

Chocolate has long been associated with milk, so much so that many women fail to realize that there are other foods that combine equally well with this protein food to provide a delicious and unusual beverage.

Fruits also so important in the child's diet are served freely when milk is also served, but for some reason, possibly the old food fallacy that fruit and milk mixed will curdle and thus be indigestible, fruit and milk is rarely ever served in combination as a beverage.

Both oranges and lemons combine with milk to form delicious beverages that will appeal to youngsters. So if milk is at this time in disfavor among the younger members of your family, because it has been served to frequently with no variation, try the following recipes. You may serve the nogs for breakfast in place of the usual glass of milk and soft cooked egg, by adding a well beaten egg to either recipe.

Orange Nog (Makes 1 Large Glass).

Combine ½ cup orange juice and 1 teaspoon lemon juice and stir slowly into one-third cup evaporated milk, which has been diluted with one-third cup water. Sweeten to taste with sugar and chill, if desired, by shaking thoroughly with cracked ice. Fresh whole milk may be used in place of the evaporated milk and water in this recipe and the next.

Lemon Nog (Serves 2).

Combine ¼ cup lemon juice, 1 cup water and 4 tablespoons sugar. Stir slowly into ⅓ cup evaporated milk. Chill, if desired, by shaking thoroughly with cracked ice.

Cottage Cheese Cake Improved By Corn Flakes

Corn flakes and cottage cheese! The combination sounds impossible. But investigate the idea thoroughly. Try the following recipe and you are certain to place it on your approved list for warm-weather desserts.

This honorable-mention recipe submitted last week in The Post's recipe contest is a delightful version of the ever popular refrigerator cake.

Cottage Cheese Cake.

2 level tablespoons plain gelatin
3 egg yolks, slightly beaten
1 pound cottage cheese put through sieve
1 lemon, juice and grated rind
3 egg whites, beaten stiff
½ cup cold water
½ cup sugar
½ cup water
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup cream, whipped stiff

Soak gelatin in water for about 5 minutes. Cook slightly beaten egg yolks, sugar and water for about 3 minutes and add softened gelatin; add the cottage cheese which has been put through a sieve, lemon juice and rind; salt and let cool. When cool, add egg whites and whipped cream.

Top and Bottom of Cake.

½ cup butter, melted
2 cups corn flakes, crushed fine (or 2 cups zwieback)
4 tablespoons sugar
1 teaspoon cinnamon

Mix all together and put half of mixture into spring form or torte pan. Fill with cheese mixture, sprinkling the rest of the crumbs mixture over the top and place in refrigerator for one hour.

Food Faddism And Diets Held Harmful Habits

Magazine Cites Usages of Americans on Question of Eating, Reducing.

Mass ignorance about eating and universal willingness to try any new system that is adequately ballyhooed, are charged to the American people in a study of food faddism and diets just completed by Fortune magazine and published today in the May issue.

It asserts that the Anglo-Saxon tradition has given us "a passionless attitude" toward food, and that a characteristic fear of illness causes Americans to eat for health and not for pleasure.

"As soon as one eating stunt falls into disrepute, or, more likely, succumbs to public boredom, another is ballyhooed to the status of a temporary cult," the Fortune study states, citing the new discredited Hollywood diet as typical.

"Other two-food diets for reducing are no safer than the Hollywood method," Fortune continues. "The pineapple and lamb chop diet, the baked potato and buttermilk diet and the raw tomato and hard boiled egg diet are only slightly better known than the others. None of them is generally recommended by doctors, and although the raw tomato and hard-boiled egg combination has picked up the name 'Mayo Diet,' the Mayo Clinic brothers in Rochester, Minn., have nothing at all to do with it.

"There is, however, a reducing diet most doctors will recommend, the so-called banana and milk diet first proposed in 1934 by Dr. George A. Harrop of Johns Hopkins University. Actually this diet is not limited to bananas, which have no special advantage over many another common food, potatoes or carrots, for example. Bananas, however, taste better to most people. Dr. Harrop's diet limits bananas and milk to breakfast and lunch, allowing a small, yet complete supper.

This diet reduces most people from four to nine pounds in 20 days, since they are getting only about half as many calories as they would on a normal ration. The drawback to this or any restricted diet is that you may not be able to take so much milk and so many bananas (or some other fairly complete food) without upsetting your digestion. Above all it is important that such a diet be supervised by a doctor.

"But the safest of all ways to reduce, or rather a basic principle with which the most conservative physician will not quarrel, is simply this: Eat altogether about as much as you are accustomed to, but only enough protein (meat, fish, eggs, etc.), to supply the body's tissue needs. To keep your stomach full and thus satisfy your normal hunger, increase your ration of bulky foods (vegetables, fruits, etc.). To lose more than four or five pounds the first week, and more than two or three pounds a week thereafter, is generally dangerous. And even such a rational diet should not be attempted except on a doctor's advice."

Final Recipe Awards Set for Wednesday

The final awards in The Post's recent series of six recipe contests will be made next Wednesday, April 29, at a cooking school conducted by Dorothea Duncan, Home Economics Editor of The Post, and Carolyn Chesser, Home Economics Director of The Electric Institute, in the auditorium of the Institute in the Potomac Electric Power Building at Tenth and E streets northwest. The session will begin promptly at 2 p. m.

Readers of the food pages are invited to attend. Remember that if your recipe won a weekly prize of $1 in one of the six recent contests you are eligible to win one of the grand prizes—a chromium and black waffle set which includes a tray, iron, batter bowl and ladle and sirup pitcher, an electric iron with heat control for every type of fabric, an electric casserole and an electric kitchen clock.

Recipes that are awarded final prizes will be demonstrated for your approval.

British Princess To Attend Shool

London (AP).—Princess Margaret Rose, younger daughter of the Duke and Duchess of York, may be sent to a school for girls, thereby ending a rumored disagreement between the Duchess and Queen Mary.

The Princess will be 6 in August. Her education has begun under tutors, but the Duchess is reported desirous that she attend school.

Queen Mary is said to favor a continuance of the tutor system.

The school most likely to be chosen, it is believed, is at Battle, on the south coast. Last year Queen Mary visited it twice and the Duchess has made personal inquiries there.

Expert on Charm Calls the Dustrag Asset of Women

That the dustrag and the dustmop have not yet been adequately replaced as assets for the development of charm and grace is the belief of Margery Wilson, charm expert.

"Housecleaning," says Miss Wilson, "gives a woman a chance for three important things: exercise, freedom of thought and imagination, and the handling of precious things. A woman isn't going to be slipshod and careless when she's putting away her best china. A little contemplation while dusting the bookshelves is worth a 100 gossip sessions at the bridge table."

Bridge brings out the worst in women believes Miss Wilson. The craze for the game has set America's charm rating back 40 per cent, she maintains.

Flood Control Bill May Reach Senate Today

Compromise Is Reached on Land Damage Costs After Long Fight.

The question of who shall pay land damage costs on flood control projects—States or the Federal Government—last night appeared solved through a commission arranged by Army engineers. As a result, Chairman Copeland (Democrat), New York, said he expected the commerce committee to report the omnibus flood control bill to the Senate today. The dispute has held the bill in committee more than a month.

Yesterday, the committee slashed the cost of the bill almost in half by throwing out nearly $300,000,000 worth of projects involving generation of power, leaving projects in the bill estimated to cost $315,000,000. Virtually all of the combination flood-power projects removed from the bill would have been located on Southern streams and rivers.

The compormise on land damage costs offered by the Board of Army Engineers contemplates the addition of a new section to the bill, outlining the division of costs and granting the Secretary of War considerable discretion in making levies.

Chief Provisions.

Main provisions of the compromise are

1. The Federal Government will pay all costs when 75 per cent or more of the benefits of a project accrue to States other than to the State in which the project is located.

2. States receiving as much as 25 per cent of the benefits of a project will be assessed by the Secretary of War, and will be expected to pay land damage and operating costs in proportion to the benefits they receive.

In cases where flood control benefits from projects are purely intrastate, the State will be required:

1. To provide without cost to the United States all lands and rights of way necessary for the construction of the project.

2. To keep the Federal Government free from damages due to construction work.

3. To maintain and operate the project after completion in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War.

States Reimbursement.

The compromise provides further that whenever expenditures for lands or right of way exceed the Army engineers' estimates, the State will be reimbursed 50 per cent of the excess cost.

If more than 25 per cent and less than 75 per cent of the benefits of a project accrue to States other than the one in which the project is located, the Secretary of War is authorized to collect up to 5 per cent of the land damage costs from the States which the project will benefit, and spend this fund, plus the remaining 5 per cent to be provided by the Federal Government, for the necessary lands and rights of way in the State where the project is located.

Federal Roosters Belligerent

This healthy looking white leghorn being held by Dr. H. O. Calvery, of Food and Drug Administration, is among the flock cooped on the sixth floor of Department of Agriculture Building. They are used in experiments to determine purity of drugs.

70 Roosters, Used in Drug Tests, Give Rural Air to U. S. Building

White Leghorns May Do Their Bit for Science, but to Casual Agriculture Department Visitor They Appear to Spend Time Crowing, Fighting.

By the Associated Press.

The shrill, defiant crowing of some 70 roosters burst forth at odd intervals yesterday from behind a frosted glass office door on the sixth floor of the Agriculture Department Building.

In nearby offices stenographers chewed their gum without surprise, but frowned slightly as the discordant noise resounded through the corridors.

While the birds lent a rural touch to the Agriculture Department, scientists said yesterday the purpose of their presence was to test the power of a drug for the Food and Drug Administration.

The White Leghorn roosters may indulge in a lot of experimenting, but to an occasional visitor it appeared that they spent most of their time crowing and fighting.

They are quartered in two rows of cages in the center of a long room. The cages are higher than a tall man's head, and about 3 feet in width.

"Why are some of these roosters almost without feathers and why are they looking very unhappy?" the scientist was asked. "Is this the result of your experiments?"

"Oh no," was the weary reply. "The tests we make have no effect upon their health, but they fight from morning to night."

The scientist explained that the food and drug administration must see that drugs are pure and meet required standards. Ergot, a powerful concoction made from fungus on wheat and rye, is used widely by hospitals.

The administration gives the roosters injections of ergot. The potency of the drug is determined by the color of the rooster's comb within one or two days after the injection.

Eastern Rails Agree to Cut Rates, Report

Slash Expected on June 3; Court Move Against I. C. C. Delayed.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 24.—Irrespective of any plans for a court test later, Eastern railroads will comply with the Interstate Commerce Commission's order cutting passenger rates to 2 cents a mile, effective June 2, it was stated in informed railroad quarters today.

Baltimore & Ohio and its affiliated roads have already filed tariffs with the commission covering the reduced rates, the commission's action having met no opposition from this group.

The other Eastern carriers banded together to consider the advisability of a move to enjoin the commission from enforcing the reduced schedules, calling for 2 cents a mile in coaches and 3 cents in Pullmans. For the last 18 years the official tariffs have been 3 cents in coaches and 4 cents a mile in Pullmans.

The opposing roads, following the commission's order a few weeks ago, offered to cut their rates to 2½ cents. But this proposal was turned down by the commission last Saturday.

Rail executives comprising the passenger-fare committee of the Eastern presidents' conference held a long session yesterday at which the question of injunction proceedings was considered. F. E. Williamson, president of the New York Central, chairman of the committee, announced after the meeting that no conclusion had been reached and that a final decision would be made at a meeting of the Eastern presidents' conference next Tuesday.

The decision to file the new tariffs pending further discussion of injunction possibilities was due, according to rail circles, to the nearness of the effective date of the new rates and the wish to avoid the confusion which it was felt would result from a dual set of passenger rates in Eastern territory. This, it was pointed out, could not be avoided in view of the Baltimore & Ohio's plans.

Dopkin Tells Social Unit Of Maryland Pensions

New York, April 24 (AP).—Old-age pensions in Maryland average $17.25 per month, Lee L. Dopkin, a member of the Board of State Aid and Charities, told the American Association for Social Security today.

Dopkin predicted that the State would be paying 12,000 pensions by the end of this year. He said that about $3,000,000 is available for pensions, the amount coming from county, State and Federal sources.

"In the 1936 session of the Maryland Legislature," Dopkin said, "several of the counties received permission to close their poorhouses, indciating that the hope of many Marylanders of forever closing the poorhouses may soon be fulfilled."

Hearing on Rail Buses Fixed Monday by I. C. C.

Proposal of the Arlington & Fairfax Railway Co. to operate "autorailer" buses from Virginia into the downtown section of the District via Key Bridge is to be considered at a public hearing before a joint board of the Interstate Commerce Commission at 10 a. m. on Monday.

Opposition to the proposal already has been expressed by the Arnold Virginia-Maryland and Washington bus line. The Capital Transit Co. also is interested in the case. William A. Roberts, people's counsel, also is to appear. The application is pending before the District Public Utilities Commission.

Puerto Rico Plebiscite

a hold-up," but added that nevertheless Puerto Rico would accept independence "even under the most unjust terms."

There was a feeling in some quarters that the Administration is simply "calling the bluff" of nationalist leaders on the island who have been violently agitating for independence. The opinion was expressed among some of those who have studied the problem that complete severance from the United States would mean disaster to the overpopulated country.

Puerto Rico is far from self-supporting, depending on the United States for most of the necessities of life and on an American dole for the actual living expenses of most of its population.

Independence of Puerto Rico, which could be achieved at the end of four years under provisions of the Tydings bill, would eliminate United States control from the last of the commercially important territory obtained from Spain following the war in 1898. The American mandate over Cuba has been removed, and the Philippines are on their way to independence.

No Indiscriminate Freedom.

Gruening made it clear that it was not the policy of the United States to give independence to its possessions indiscriminately. The attitude appears to be that freedom will be given only to such possessions as show themselves to be dissatisfied with American rule. Severence of Puerto Rico would leave Alaska and Hawaii as the principal possessions, with the addition of such island possessions as the Virgin Islands, Guam and American Samoa.

"The purpose of the measure is admirable," Gruening said. "It is consistent with the enlightened policies of this Administration in relation to its neighbors. It gives the people of Puerto Rico themselves the opportunity to determine what their destiny is to be.

"The bill provides that if they vote for independence at a referendum a year and a half hence, they shall have it.

"A year and a half is ample time to study and discuss the question fully and to weigh the consequences of independence.

"If, on the other hand, they decide to remain American citizens under the American flag it will settle the question which has agitated the island during recent years."

"The conditions imposed by the Tydings bill," Munoz-Marin said, "appear to have been with the intention of making the people of Puerto Rico choose between independence with ruin and starvation, or a continuance of the present unacceptable colonial status with the probability that the economic exploitation, temporarily interrupted by the Roosevelt Administration, would continue.

"Provisions that will be mutually beneficial to the United States and Puerto Rico can be made under independence.

"A decent economic arrangement under independence would be one in which the Puerto Rican market would benefit United States producers with respect to all commodities that Puerto Rico can not produce, and benefit Puerto Rican producers with respect to all commodities that Puerto Rico can produce, providing also for a reasonable quota for Puerto Rico's export crops."

The Tydings bill provides for a gradually increasing tariff on exports from the island until at the end of four years the duties would equal those charged on imports from other countries. Puerto Rico's principal export is sugar, with coffee and tobacco also important. Puerto Rican sugar growers, mostly Americans, have benefited from large AAA payments for not growing sugar cane. In addition to being deprived of these payments, sugar producers would be required to pay a tariff should independence become a fact.

When the issue on independence is finally joined, sugar is expected to play one of the most important parts. The measure is expected to have the enthusiastic support of American beet-sugar producers.

Neither the Puerto Rican Governor, Blanton Winship, who is in Washington, nor Resident Commissioner Iglesias would comment on the bill. Iglesias introduced a bill in Congress last year to give Puerto Rico statehood.

E. Mont Reily, former Governor, termed the bill "outrageous" and declared "it threatens to undo 38 years of Americanism." He said that if the measure should be passed by Congress he would go to the island and campaign against independence. He added that an independent Puerto Rico would be "another Cuba," with misrule and violence.

Islanders Astounded By Plebescite Bill

San Juan, P. R., April 24 (AP).—Introduction in Washington of a bill providing a plebiscite on independence for Puerto Rico astounded most islanders today and caused sudden adjournment of the insular legislature.

Rafael Martinez Nadal, president of the Senate, asked:

"Is Puerto Rico to be cast adrift to economic ruin in four years because a fanatic group killed one American official? If the same group killed three or four Americans the island would be condemned to independence in 24 hours."

A number of leaders expressed belief that the move puts insular politicians on the spot, especially those long seeking independence, while ignoring the large sentiment for statehood and the Democratic platform's committment for statehood.

Col. E. Francis Riggs, American, who was chief of insular police, was assassinated recently during trouble between nationalists and police.

Later Pedro Albizu Campos, president of the Nationalist Party, which is conducting an active campaign for independence, and six other Nationalists were charged with conspiracy to overthrow the United States Government by force.

Nationalists Claim Vote Is Unnecessary

Nationalists contend a plebiscite is wholly unnecessary, that the island is technically independent and all that is necessary is for the President of the United States to order United States soldiers and officials from the island.

3 Injured in Accident Aboard U. S. Submarine

San Diego, Calif., April 24 (AP).—three men were injured, slightly, late today in an engineroom mishap aboard the submarine U. S. S. Nautilus.

Naval officials withheld official reports of the accident, but it was learned a piston broke and parts struck the men. They were taken to the sick bay aboard the tender U. S. S. Holland.

Hazen Urges 5-Year Plan For Schools

Commissioner Proposes Program for New Buildings.

Purchase of 44 Land Parcels Considered by Board.

Development of a sound five-year school building program was advocated yesterday by Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen in commenting on a new school program submitted by the Board of Education.

"We must meet our school needs and keep our facilities abreast the growth of the city," the Commissioner said. "A piece-meal, year by year, hit-or-miss program for our schools is as unsatisfactory as it is for the whole municipal machinery."

The program submitted by the school authorities called for purchase of 44 pieces of land, building of 24 new schools and enlargement of 45 others. On whether that program is "sound" Commissioner Hazen refused to commit himself.

"Details of the proposal of the school officials will have to be studied carefully before the Commissioners can pass judgment," he said. The whole subject was referred to the special municipal tax and fiscal committee appointed by the Commissioners several months ago. Vernon E. West, acting corporation counsel, is chairman.

Committee Dormant.

The committee has been dormant for some time, since it submitted a study of District income and expenditures prior to the convening of the present session of Congress. That program listed public improvements which were classed as capital expenditures which would cost $75,000,000, it was estimated, rated over a ten-year period at $7,500,000 a year.

What the proposed new school building program would cost has not been estimated. The last five-year school building program, adopted in 1924, called for expenditure of $20,000,000 during the five-year period. That was estimated then as necessary to bring the school system up to then current needs. Cursory examination of the new program has led some officials to the belief that it would cost more per year to carry it out than was contemplated by the tax committee when it computed the capital needs of the city for the next ten years at $7,500,000 annually.

The latest program was the result of conferences held several months ago between Commissioner Hazen and Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools. The program has been in preparation since then.

Raise Needed.

Should the school and other needs require increased taxes, levies should be raised Commissioner Hazen said. He believes the District "could easily" raise $1,000,000 a year additional by an increase of 1 cent a gallon in the gasoline tax. While he would nominally restrict the expenditure of gas tax revenue to highway improvements he would charge to it several functions which now are paid out of the general revenues of the District. He suggested as among these the Traffic Bureau, traffic police, traffic signals and signs, and possibly other activities. He is opposed, however, to increased real estate taxes.

Development of a long-range fiscal program, sponsored by Hazen, has, however, almost fallen into the vast pit of forgotten public reforms, he said.

Nellie's companion upbraids her for being slipshod in falling into a ditch, which required calling the rescue squad to pull her out.

Poor Old Nellie Falls in Ditch; Firemen Haul Her Out Again

But Rescuers Fail to See Her Home Because She Has to Go Back to Work Pulling Scoop Shovel on Excavation Job.

It was from Aunt Dinah's quilting party,
I was seeing Nellie home.
On my arm her white hand glistened,
In the sky the moon still shone.
It was from Aunt Dinah's quilting party,
I was seeing Nellie home.

The Nellie in this story has little in common with the heroine of that old song. To begin with, this particular Nellie is an old gray mare. Life with her has been anything but a quilting party. She has worked and worked hard.

For a while yesterday it appeared that poor old Nellie might spend the night in a ditch.

Then a gallant band of firemen, unmindful of her years and faded looks, dashed to her rescue and saw to it that she got home.

Nellie and her harness mate, Jack, were at work yesterday, pulling a scoop shovel on a site where a group of houses are being erected at Seventeenth and Taylor streets northwest. Nellie got too close to the rail, as they say on the turf, and down she went into a 3-foot ditch that skirts one of the houses.

Nellie whinnied pitifully.

The laborers and mechanics on the job ran to her rescue. They unhitched her from the scoop shovel, and then tried to haul her out of the ditch. They pulled and pushed and cursed for an hour and then gave up.

Somebody thought of the Fire Department, and a call was put in for Rescue Squad No. 2.

A minute or so later a siren split the air, and presently the firemen were at Nellie's side. They got a life line, the same as would be used to rescue some beautiful damsel in distress. One end of this was tied around Nellie's bony frame. Then the line was run through a block and fall, and the stalwart fire fighters took their places and hauled Nellie out.

Thus was Nellie assured of a night in her stable instead of in the ditch. But she didn't go home right away. Once again she and Jack were hitched to the scoop shovel. The quitting hour had not yet arrived.

Youths in Auto Snatch Purses Of Five Women

Two boys about 15 years of age, using a small coupe, yesterday snatched the pocketbooks of five women.

The boys began operations shortly after noon and snatched a purse every hour until the last, Mrs. Emily Howard, West Point, N. Y., a delegate to the D. A. R. convention, lost her bag as she left convention headquarters. She lost $30 and two railroad tickets.

First victim was Mrs. Vera Green, of the Shoreham Hotel, who was walking along Calvert street in front of the hotel when a boy grabbed her purse and escaped in the "green car." Her pocketbook, she told police, contained $10.75.

While waiting for a street car at Eleventh and Clifton streets northwest, the same pair, police said, robbed Mrs. Annie M. Bragg, East Clifton Terrace Apartments, of her purse, containing $2.15.

Mrs. Mary H. Marcary, of the Chastleton Hotel, was walking along Sixteenth street northwest near T street, when the same youth took her bag containing $10.80.

At Lincoln road and Seaton street northeast, the "snatchers" grabbed the purse of Mrs. Leonard Goodwin, 70, 1831 Second street northeast, who was walking along Lincoln road. They got $5.83.

Safety Measures Urged for Crossing

The Federation of Civic Associations voted last night to ask the Board of Education and the District Commissioners for construction of either an overhead bridge or an underpass at railway tracks at Meade street northeast for the benefit of school children attending Deanwood School from the Eastland Gardens area.

At present, it was said, the children have to walk 2 miles to the school, when, by crossing the tracks, the distance is reduced to one-fifth of a mile.

The speaker was William A. Roberts, people's counsel, who told of his unsuccessful efforts at securing abolishment of grade crossings, 23 in number, on that portion of the former Chesapeake Beach Railway, which is now operated by the East Washington Railway.

D. C. Budget Amendments Are Opposed

Group in House Attacks Supply Bill Changes Made by Senate.

Conferees Selected by Byrns; Conferences to Start Soon.

The House sub-committee on District Appropriations late yesterday revealed its antagonism to the Senate amendments to the District supply bill as Acting Chairman Blanton (Democrat), of Texas, moved that the House disagree and the bill go to conference.

"The Senate put 87 amendments on this bill and then passed it in 10 minutes (actually 15), Blanton told the House.

The amendments were merely restorations of Budget Bureau figures slashed by the House.

Representative Rich (Republican), of Pennsylvania, chirped in with the inquiry:

"Will the conferees assure us that they'll give more time than that to the report?"

Blanton replied that the fact the House spent several days on the measure before sending it to the Senate was an indication of what the House managers would do.

Five conferees were named by Speaker Byrns to meet the six Senate conferees. Representative Cannon (Democrat), of Missouri, was named chairman, although he did not participate in the hearings on the bill or in the debate on the floor.

The other four members are Representatives Blanton, Jacobsen, of Iowa, and Johnson, of West Virginia, all Democrats, and Ditter, of Pennsylvania, the only Republican.

The Senate bill, largely because appropriations were restored to Budget Bureau recommendations, carries $1,259,437 more than the House measure.

Conferences will await the call of Senator Thomas, chairman of the Senate managers, but it is likely the first session will be held next week.

Anti-Noise Leader Says Drive Will Be Largely Education

An educational campaign similar to that conducted in New York City will be largely depended on to advance the District anti-noise drive, Harry P. Somerville, manager of the Willard Hotel and chairman of the plan and scope sub-committee of the noise committee, said yesterday.

No other regulations than that forbidding blowing automobile horns between 11 p. m. and 7 a. m., will be sought, he said. That regulation now is being drafted by Vernon E. West, acting corporation counsel.

"We already have plenty of laws on the statute books to reduce the noises of the city," Somerville said in announcing no other new regulations would be requested. "We realize all the noise of the city can't be stopped, but co-operation will lessen the noise and eliminate many noises."

Twenty-five thousand stickers are to be distributed among automobile drivers soon. They will bear the admonition "use your brakes instead of your horn."

Drunk's Admission Cuts Term 60 Days

An honest confession beats an alibi by 60 days, Herbert Wells learned in Police Court yesterday.

Wells, charged with intoxication, told Judge Edward Curran that his uncertain steps were caused by effects of an auto accident.

"You're lying," said Curran.

"O. K.," said Wells, with a grin, "I was stinking drunk."

Said Curran, "Instead of $100 fine and 90 days, you can serve 30."

Street Sprays For Children Urged Here

Shipstead Proposes 50 Fire Plug 'Sprinklers' for Summer Use.

Would Cost $15 Each; Playground Council Work Praised.

Senator Henrik Shipstead, of Minnesota, last night suggested 50 shower attachments for fire plugs which, he said, would be sufficient to bathe the whole juvenile population of the city.

Speaking at a meeting of the City-Wide Playground Council in the District building, he explained that the showers could be bought for $15 apiece and would spray 200 children at once.

"After playing in our playgrounds, which are a disgrace to civilization," he said, "the boys and girls get filthy from the dirt. Some of them have to go back home to families who cannot afford a bathroom. But if these showers were turned on for half an hour before supper, they could go home clean."

Council Is Commended.

He commended the council for its work in bettering the playground conditions in the District, a work which, he said, was second in importance to none in any community.

"But," he added, "it all costs money. We have plenty of funds for some things, but they say that human life is the cheapest thing to produce, so it is not worth while to spend money to save it. The cost of maintaining reformatories, however, should give them a little food for thought."

The council, in existence for over a year without a constitution, adopted one last night. It expanded the membership of the body to include not only delegates from playground councils, but also from citizens' associations and other civic organizations interested in the subject.

Urges Developing Land.

Sibyl Baker, director of the District playground department, said that the present need is not so much one of new land for playgrounds, but of the development of the land already owned by the city.

She complained that the WPA did not supply enough skilled workers for her department to be able to make as much use of their aid as, for instance, the highway department, which has a large number of engineers on hand.

There was considerable discussion of a bill pending before Congress which would allow the city's swimming pools to be let to concessionaires. Concern was expressed lest the concessionaires charge too high a fee and thus close the pools to those whose need was greatest. The question was referred to a committee.

Dr. Edward E. Richardson, chairman of the council, presided.

Auto Parking

Parking meters, proposed installation of which has aroused brisk controversy among District officials, came to the foreground again yesterday when a nationally known architect was revealed as being among opponents of the plan.

William A. Delano, New York architect and a member of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, believes municipal garages and not parking meters are needed to relieve traffic congestion, according to correspondence with H. P. Caemmerer, secretary of the Fine Arts Commission, which the latter made public yesterday.

Parking garage facilities could be provided at a cost of 9 cents a day, said Delano. Under the meter scheme, motorists drop a coin in the machine, which keeps a record of the parking time. Policemen check on the meters to determine whether the car's owner has overstayed the limit.

Delano sent Caemmerer plans for a three-story municipal garage woud cost $180,000 and accommodate 225 cars. A daily rate of 13 cents would be charged patrons. If the capacity were four times as great, the cost could be lowered to 9 cents.

Legion's Depot for Veterans Of Future Smacks of Nursery

Gimme Bita Pi Fraternity Serenades College Emulators With Radio Skit Before Opening; Youths' Commander Replies to Critic.

The Veterans of Future Wars, college youths who have organized to get their bonus in advance, now have a first aid station and supply depot." It is located at 1115 Fourteenth street northwest, and is equipped with everything from a diaper to a kiddie kar.

The depot was established last night by the Gimme Bita Pi Fraternity, the members of which, seen drinking beer after their labors, looked suspiciously like World War veterans who belong to Victory Post No. 4, of the American Legion.

Before unveiling the window display on Fourteenth street, the World War men did a skit on the radio in which they serenaded the Veterans of Future Wars at Princeton and elsewhere and the Future Gold Star Mothers at Vassar, as follows:

"Let's be wise, let's be prudent
Sings the modern college student.
We will never fight the foe
Unless we're paid before we go."

The men of Gimme Bita Pi Fraternity, in setting up the relief station and supply depot, appear to have raided a baby's nursery and a sophomore's room and then to have scrambled the contents.

In one corner are several helmets, miniatures of those worn overseas.

Then there are a little green kiddie car, kindegrarten blocks and what the Victory Post men call "instruments of torture"—a ukelele and a saxophone.

"Now," said a hard-boiled top sergeant, "I want to show you the engineer's department."

He pointed to a pile of toy shovels such as little boys use in digging at the seashore.

There is something there, too, for the Vassar girls—a bundle of yarn and some knitting needles.

In the radio skit over WOL one of the veterans said he had 24 dolls to send to the Vassar girls so that they could play mothers.

"Move they be sent," said another.

"Second the motion."

"You have heard the motion. All in favor will cry."

"Ma, ma!"

While the World War men were drinking their beer at the "supply depot" last night, an announcement was made by J. A. Moses, commander of Washington Post, No. 1, Veterans of Future Wars, that he and his comrades would not attend the "open house" being given by Victory Post of the American Legion on May 4.

Commander Moses, after recalling that the invitation placed a ban on ukeleles and saxaphones and announced Victory Post would not be responsible for "lost coonskin coats," had this to say:

"Since the debacle of 1929 increasing numbers of us have been paying for our own 'sheepskin' by working while we studied. This has caused us to cast aside the items mentioned in your invitation and to take up our economic and history books. It is to this change that our organization owes its birth.

"I sincerely believe that our two organiaztions have much to gain by friendly co-operation. It might be well for your group to take your ideas of college students from real life instead of from the Hollywood conception. For our own part, I am sure we could well pdoñt from the valuable experience of your recent bonus success in bringing about the realization of our own aims. With your experience before us, we shall continue to strive to emulate your success."

To which Eddie Atwell, of the Gimme Bita Pi Fraternity, replied:

Bureau Head Denies Claim Oyster Is Dead

Dr. Gus W. Dyer, who made a hit with the Daughters of the American Revolution the other night by telling them that a Socialist is like an oyster because he is "more dead than alive," probably didn't realize he was two blocks away from the Bureau of Fisheries and a scant 25 miles from Chesapeake Bay.

Not that Maryland's and Virginia's bivalves left their beds in the bay to seek out Dr. Dyer for revenge—they didn't. But Charles E. Jackson, director of the bureau, took up their cause with alacrity and said: "The oyster is very much alive and if persons who do not now have the opportunity of enjoying this succulent piece de resistance could have more of them, they would become more alive."

Jackson called attention to an oyster shell in his office that bears evidence of the struggle that the oyster puts forth to protect itself and remain alive." Its enemies bore from without, and this particular shell shows that in the oyster's fight against a new pest, the leech, the oyster built a new shell to keep out its enemy, and then built another when this was punctured.

"Considering that the oyster cannot run from its enemies, it is indeed remarkable how it stands its ground and fights for existence. If Dr. Dyer is going to find some illustration for a Socialist, the oyster is the last thing he should pick on."

Prosecution of the Capital Transit Co. because of excessive impurities in the air inside its buses was threatened yesterday by William A. Robert's people's counsel.

The threat was made after publication of the result of tests of air in buses made by the District Health Department under Dr. George C. Ruhland, health officer.

The findings, reported to the Public Utilities Commission, showed the amount of carbon dioxide in some buses was more than twice the maximum considered acceptable by health authorities. The amount of carbon dioxide ranged, in the last six weeks, from 8 to 30 parts in 10,000. Thirteen parts is considered the maximum desirable.

The maximum has been fixed by the Health Department, which seeks to enforce its rule through the Public Utilities Commission, but the commission has not prescribed any definite limits of impurities. Roberts has asked Dr. Ruhland for a copy of his latest report. This will be studied, he said, with a view to undertaking prosecution under the general utilities act, without regard to lack of specific commission orders, if more effective law may not be found as a basis for punitive court action.

Allegedly foul air in the buses has been the subject of sharp and bitter complaint on the part of representatives of the Federation of Citizens Associations and individual citizens' associations and others at public hearings before the commission for the last several years.

Fred A. Sager, chief engineer of the commission, said tests of air in buses are being made from time to time. Whenever ventilation of a bus is found to be inadequate, the company is told about it, he said.

John H. Hanna, president of the Capital Transit Co., admitting ventilation of buses was not satisfactory, said his company was conducting experiments, in co-operation with the engineers of the commission, in an effort to develop a new ventilation system. So far no system has been put into operation.

The utilities law, under which Roberts said he contemplated prosecutions, requires the companies to operate buses which are sanitary and healthful. The law imposes a maximum penalty of $200 a day for each violation.

Hancock to Offer Bill Repealing 'Congressional Immunity;' Zioncheck 'Talked Out' of Airing Traffic Grievances in House

Clerk Arraigned in Court on Charge of Striking Man With Auto.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

While Representative Marion A. (Who, Me?) Zioncheck spent yesterday in seclusion, Representative Hancock (Republican), of New York, said he would introduce a "very timely" amendment to the Constitution to "repeal the immunity of Congressmen from arrest, except for treason, felony and breach of the peace."

"I'm not mentioning any names," Hancock said, "but I know of several instances in which Congressmen have gone around here and confused and scared little judges and policemen. Congressmen ought to be held to strict accountability for obeying laws—more so than any other citizens."

Apparently abandoning earlier threats to "make somebody pay" for his Traffic Court sojourn behind the bars, Zioncheck barricaded himself against inquiries. The usually talkative Seattle Democrat gave waiting newsmen but one chance to quote him. And that was when he emerged from seclusion long enough to answer "here" when the House roll was called.

Meanwhile, the United States Court of Appeals yesterday refused to pass on rights of the District Commissioners to revoke or suspend driver's permits under current efforts to promote highway safety.

Charging his permit was suspended by an unconstitutional delegation of legislative authority, Joseph E. Campbell, Department of Agriculture employe, convicted of speeding 54 miles an hour on Key Bridge, carried his case to the appelate court.

But the court declined to grant a review, explaining merely that Campbell's "writ of error" was denied. Through attorneys William J. Kelly and J. Chase McKenzie, Campbell indicated he would take his plea to the United States Supreme Court.

He contended he had a property right in his permit, which could not be taken away from him without "due process of law." He claimed this "due process" was not allowed him at a hearing before the Board of Review and Revocation of Operators' Permits.

A new "Congressional" traffic case was heard by Judge Walter J. Casey yesterday. Thomas J. Flatley, 36, described as a clerk in the House of Representatives, was arraigned on a charge of driving while intoxicated.

Police accused him of striking a pedestrian and dragging him 95 feet. The injured man, John Simms, colored, 38, of 238 Fourth street southwest, was reported in a serious condition in Casualty Hospital last night.

Flatley pleaded not guilty to the charge and was released in bond of $500, pending a jury trial. According to police, Flatley's car struck Simms near Seventh street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest. They said no skid marks were observed on the street to indicate that Flatley attempted to avoid striking the man.

It was learned that Zioncheck had planned to air his grievances on the House floor yesterday.

"We talked him out of it," said a close friend.

Yesterday, Sergt. George I. Hellmuth, of the Tenth Precinct, who produced Zioncheck's "body" in court, as Judge Casey ordered, was at home nursing a swollen thumb, injured during the scuffle in front of the House Office Building. Physicians said there was no fracture.

Representative's Case May Be Used as 'Test' in Duffy Warrant.

With the subject of "Congressional immunity" now open for renewed discussion, District officials are pondering disposition of a parking warrant still pending against Senator F. Ryan Duffy (Democrat), Wisconsin.

Officials intimated that the Zioncheck case may be used to "test" the authority of local police to serve the Duffy warrant. Charges of intoxication and disorderly conduct against Zioncheck are pending before the United States Court of Appeals.

After a New Year's Eve bell ringing escapade in a Connecticut avenue apartment house, Zioncheck was convicted in Police Court. He appealed, stressing Congressional immunity from arrest.

If the Court of Appeals rules on Congressional Immunity when deciding the Zioncheck case, local authorities will know how to proceed, it was pointed out yesterday.

Fantastic Tale Is Revealed in Film at Palace

By Nelson B. Bell.

"THINGS TO COME." United Artists release of London Films picturization of H. G. Wells' book "The Shape of Things To Come," starring Raymond Massey, with Edward Chapman, Ralph Richardson, Margaretta Scott, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Maurice Bradell, Sophie Stewart, Derrick de Marney, Ann Todd, Pearl Argyle, Kenneth Villiers, Ivan Brandt and Anne McLaren. Produced by Alexander Korda; directed by William Cameron Menzies. Previewed Tuesday night, April 7.

In adopting a new medium for the expression of his views as to the revolutionary reforms necessary to salvage a distraught world from "wars and rumors of wars" and emancipate mankind from the tyranny of events under which it has suffered through the centuries, H. G. Wells paints his screen with vivid highlights and deepest shadows.

There is none of the spirit of moderation in "Things to Come." It sweeps the spectator from the multiplied destruction, suffering and horror of the next World War, with its aftermath of a decimating pestilence, to the heights of a new social order that reflects man's perfected civilization of a century hence. The film fantasy, which opened its Washington engagement at Loew's Palace Theater yesterday, thus divides itself naturally and logically into two distinct stories and forms of narrative—one dealing with the present sad state of the world; the other spreading before the startled vision of the audience an imaginative and fantastic Utopia in which the genus homo seems to have conquered every element of Nature by the power of intellectual and spiritual freedom and tremendous scientific and mechanical achievement.

Early Basis for Contrast.

The first half of the pictured narrative, although it establishes a sound and vivid basis for future contrast, strikes no note of originality or novelty in its depiction of the devastating effects of modern warfare. To drive home its lesson of the barbarity of human slaughter, this portion of the film presents little more than a horrendous composite of all the hideous battlefield shambles that have passed across the screen in an almost continuous procession since the crimson days of 1914-18. Another story is told, however, in the reconstruction sequences of the production.

Here, "Things to Come" completely lives up to its title by providing a majestically spectacular visualization of what Mr. Wells surmises may happen 100 years from now. Mankind has at last come into his ostensible birthright of freedom from the retarding impediments of the age in which we now live. Magnificent cities are bitten into the depths of towering hills and cliffs; science has safeguarded health until even common colds are no longer known—this alone would make it a real Utopia—all air is conditioned, sunlight manufactured and such present-day conveniences as the radio, telephone and the like have become mere tiny gadgets worn almost invisibly on the wrist.

Intellectual Emancipation.

Along with this material and mechanical development has come a comparable expansion of man's intellectual capacity to grasp the real function of his presence on earth. The philosophy of living is expounded, with a directness and forcefulness characteristic of Wells in the grip of a vast personal conviction, through the friendly arguments of Cabal, leader of the New Order, and Passworthy, the symbol of the world's conservatives and reactionaries. The element of rebellion, existent in every community, no matter how well regulated, is personified by Theotocopulos, the sculptor.

A final period is put to the discussion when Cabal and Passworthy permit their daughter and son, respectively, to decide for themselves that they want to be shot from the space gun on a flight around the moon, the contention being that an adult person has the right to live daringly, dangerously and heroically to increase the total sum of human knowledge of the Universe around him and that in so doing he does the world a greater service than by living sluggishly and unprofitably to a ripe old age.

That, in short, seems to be the gist of Mr. Wells' philosophy of the totalitarian state. As his first obstacle to its attainment he sets up a military despot known as The Boss, who presents a study in dictatorship that probably will not be found pleasing in the eyes of Rome and a certain belligerent gentleman residing there.

Is Expertly Rounded Drama.

To the effective pointing of this stirring entertainment, Mr. Wells, his producer, Alexander Korda, and Director William Cameron Menzies have brought the full play of human moods and emotions and an inventive mechanical skill that the screen has never matched. There is genuine excitement in the rearing of the Everytown of 2036 A. D., and a sensational climax in the firing of the space gun to bring the picture to a close.

Raymond Massey, as Cabal; Edward Chapman, as Passworthy; Ralph Richardson, as The Boss; Maurice Bradell, in the role of Dr. Harding, the scientist who would not dedicate his knowledge to the pursuits of war; Margaretta Scott, as wife of The Boss and the canniest of the Old Order, and the numerous others in the cast contrive by their individual and collective skill to convey both the fantasy and the strength of the picture's solemn, but essentially uplifting, message.

The photographic aspects of the production quite keep pace with the magnitude and magnificence of the film's extraordinary picturesqueness. Except for the humorous bombast of The Boss, "Things to Come" seems to indicate that such things as humor and "comedy relief" will have disappeared from the face of the earth by the time another century has spent itself.

"Table Tennis" is the title of an interesting short subject that shows four champions engaged in the complexities of the lightning-fast game that once bore the ignominious title of "ping-pong." Pete Smith supplies the amusing running comment. The Metrotone News and usual auxiliaries complement a unique and purposeful major feature.

Continental Beauty on Belasco Screen

When the film play of "Ecstasy" was produced in Czechoslovakia, it was necessary that a young actress of surpassing charm appear in the daring role of the symbolic play's heroine. Hedy Kiesler, the alluring young woman pictured above—wife of a wealthy munitions manufacturer—was chosen for the part, and, after many vicissitudes, is currently to be seen in it on a Washington screen. "Ecstasy," after a hectic career of banishment, litigation and whatnot, was accorded its Capital premiere in the Belasco Theater last night.

Earle

"I MARRIED A DOCTOR." Warner Brothers picturization of Sinclair Lewis' novel of "Main Street," adapted to the screen by Harriet Ford and Harvey O'Higgins, co-starring Pat O'Brien and Josephine Hutchinson, with Ross Alexander, Guy Kibbee, Louise Fazenda, Olin Howland, Margaret Irving, Grace Stafford, Ray Mayer, Robert Barrat, Hedwiga Reicer, Willard Robertson, Thomas Pogue, Harry Hayden, Janet Young Gaby Fay and Sam Wren. Directed by Archie Mayo. Reviewed Friday morning.

The mischievous spirit of gossip and "small-town" prejudice which made Sinclair Lewis' novel of "Main Street" a bit of a storm center at the time of its publication has been effectively captured in this celluloid version of a biting analysis of the prairie town point of view. It is drama that sometimes permits itself to grow a little bitter in its disclosure of a few of the unfortunate qualities of what is customarily known as "human nature," but, by and large, it catches both the humor and the honesty of the book upon which it is founded and presents only a slightly distorted picture of "city life" in the Middle West.

The story centers in Dr. William P. Kennicott, foremost physician in the town of Williamsburg, who marries a girl from Chicago who comes to his home intent upon making friends with all of his life-long associates and being an aid rather than a hindrance to the pursuit of his profession. But things do not turn out precisely as Carol Kennicott had planned. By making friends with her husband's male companions, she alienates their wives; by exercising a sympathetic interest in an aspiring young artist, she inspires malicious gossip, and in attempting to launch a campaign of civic betterment she incurs the resentment of all of her new acquaintances of all ages and both genders. Separation from her husband and a return to the metropolitan center, with whose manners and customs she is familiar, seems the only solution. How successfully this scheme worked had best be learned from the screen of the Earle Theater.

Is Skillfully Adapted.

The atmosphere and tempo of the typical Midwestern city have been perfectly caught in the translation of the printed work into terms of the cinema—as was to have been expected at the hands of such experienced playwrights as Harriet Ford and Harvey O'Higgins. A nice job of casting, furthermore, has been done in selecting players to visualize the types they are expected to portray.

Pat O'Brien and Josephine Hutchinson lack quite the fullness of opportunity that was afforded them in "Oil for the Lamps of China," but acquit themselves with fine credit, if one is able to overlook a little too much urbanity on the part of Mr. O'Brien, who finds it difficult to be anything but a "big city" fellow. Miss Hutchinson's metropolitanism is wholly in character.

Guy Kibbee, as Sam Clark, the hardware man; Olin Howland, as Dave Dyer, the druggist, mortician and village comedian; Margaret Irving, as his jealous wife; Louise Fazenda and Ray Mayer, as Bea Sorenson and Miles Bjornstam, the Swedish maid and the town's man-of-all-work; Ross Alexander, as Erik Valborg, and Robert Barrat and Hedwig Reicher, as his intolerant parents—in fact, the whole roster of principals contribute effective bits of portraiture in roles of varying degrees of importance and interest.

In its snow-buried winter scenes, "I Married a Doctor" presents many vistas that will induce an acute nostalgia in all who grew up amid such pristine scenes of simple beauty. With all of its homely setting, the picture possesses a freshness of treatment and a deft blending of comedy, romance, temperamental clashes and near-tragedy that distinctly differentiate it from the silent screen version of the same story.

Bill Robinson Triumphs.

The new week's stage bill at the Earle is opened by the Kitaros Troupe of Japanese foot-jugglers, long familiar to Washington audiences. Ray and Sunshine, two feminine acrobatic dancers of unique accomplishment, adorn the deuce spot and Miss Audrey Sieber—presenting a kaleidoscope of smart frocks—then introduces Lester Cole and his Texas Rangers, who later turn midshipmen, in a rousing interval of cowboy and collegiate songs that was enthusiastically encored at yesterday's first performance.

The piece de resistance of the vaudeville portion of the program, of course, is supplied by Bill Robinson in his genial jesting and peerless tap dancing. In the intricacies of the tap, if Barney Fagin, George Primrose, George M. Cohan, Pat Rooney, and a few others of the best, all could be rolled into one superlative "hoofer," he would be almost as good as "Bojangles" Robinson. When it comes to a maximum effect with a minimum of apparent effort, Bill is in a class exclusively and unequivocally by himself. Not the least gracious and effective feature of his act is the curtain speech of thanks that quite obviously wells from the heart of a man whose agility and bubbling humor belie his 58 years, the greater part of which have been devoted to honorable contributions to the theater and the joy of living.

An issue of the Paramount Varieties, the Paramount News, with brief shots of the Moose River mine rescue, and Freddie Clark's orchestral interludes supplement a feature that won a round of applause from those present yesterday morning and early afternoon.

Loew's Fox

"THE MOON'S OUR HOME." Paramount picturization of the story by Faith Baldwin, adapted by Boyce DeGaw, with additional dialogue by Dorothy Parker and Alan Campbell, starring Margaret Sullivan and Henry Fonda, supported by Beulah Bondi, Charles Butterworth, Margaret Hamilton, Henrietta Crosman, Dorothy Stickney, Lucien Littlefield and Walter Brennan. Directed by William Seiter. Reviewed Friday afternoon by Dorothea Lewis.

We're going to be a bore this week telling everyone we can corner just how nice this show is.

Harmony is the Fox's key word—and that doesn't mean, as you might think, that Ray Noble and his grand band are the only news of note. Far from it. No, the harmony we men is the happy combination of a good picture, a good stage show, and, in the picture, an unusual assemblage of good actors, dialogue, story and direction.

In short, "The Moon's Our Home" is delightfully cockeyed, and a chance to meet the people who make their homes there would make a trip to the moon a temptation.

Cherry Chester, movie actress and social registerite, and Anthony Amberton, boy explorer (with or without apologies to Richard Halliburton) and author of that best-seller, "Atop the Himalayas," never meet, as such, until after they are married. But they have grown very fond of each other in the meanwhile as plain (?) Sarah Brown and plainer John Smith, the names they were born with, outgrew, but use again in an escape from their publics to Moonsocket, R. I., and winter sports and love. Yes, that's where the Moon-home business comes in.

The Picture's Many Assets.

Don't for a minute let the above mislead you into thinking this just another mistaken-identity piece. The names really don't matter very much. What does matter are such things as Susan, the sleigh horse who gets skittish during the full moon, Mrs. Simpson and her satin nightgown, Anthony's hatred of perfume, Cherry-Sarah's skiing lessons, etc., etc.

And, primarily, the fact that Margaret Sullavan is the wide-eyed, temperamental, lovable, unpredictable Cherry-Sarah; that Henry Fonda is a tall, attractive, smiling, very likeable Anthony-John, and that the remainder of the cast is perfection itself from the acid Margaret Hamilton, as Mrs. Simpson; the brisk and sharp Beulah Bondi, the bewildered Mr. Butterworth, the storming Henrietta Crosman, and the deaf Lem of Walter Brennan, right down to Dorothy Stickney, who goes to town with about three "sides" and a maid's apron. Here is one of the best casts of many, many moons—home, full, or any other variety.

Also not to be forgotten—nor missed—is the typical Dorothy Parker dialogue, which Dorothy Parker and her husband, Alan Campbell, have contributed to speed things along and heighten the hilarity. It's fun to pick out the particular bon mots you think Dorothy contributed—we're sure Anthony's preference for primitive women came from her pen.

Skillful Direction.

It should be no suprise, of course, that Margaret Sullavan and Henry Fonda — once Mr. and Mrs. Fonda—play beautifully together. They put in their acting apprenticeship at West Falmouth in one of the first summer theaters back in 1929, and co-starred in "The Devil in the Cheese." "The Constant Nymph" and "A Kiss for Cinderella," and they have been reunited once — as actors — since their divorce, in a fine production of "Coquette," at the Mount Kisco summer theater in 1934.

Purely from a personal and prying point of view, we wonder how they felt during their frequent discussions of marriage in this, their first movie together—including that particularly pertinent and pointed line of Miss Sullavan's—"Remember me? I'm the girl you married once."

Program Excels.

Friday afternoon was an event in our life; we discovered Ray Noble and the far-reaching effect may be that we will even have to start listening to the radio. He made us sorry we don't know more about music than what we like and what we don't like, because there are probably lots of technical reasons why he is as good as he is.

All we know is that his brasses are sturdy and sure but never blarey, that his strings are soft and sing, that they blend so smoothly into each other that he can play "Bugle Rag" (it may have been old before he played it, but now it's new); and the lovely, lovely "Londonderry Air," one right after the other, each beautifully. His foxtrot arrangement of the "Blue Danube" is elegant, though we'd bet a good dancer could still waltz to that almost unchangeable waltz ryhthm.

For good measure he presents the sweet-voiced Al Bowlly, the harmonizing Freshmen, and Jimmy and Nora Bell, who tap with taste and talent. His act might well have been the entire stage show.

However, the Fox adds Siegfried, juggling and ballancing—and woe to him if he should ever get a stiff neck—and Nice, Florio and Lubow, going in for the more strenuous side of dancing.

There is also a long newsreel, a sportorial, and an unusually excellent Phil Lampkins overture to complete a bill, which though long, is something to be grateful for.

Belasco

"ECSTACY." Eureka release of the Slavia-Filma production, featuring Hedy Kiesler, Jaromir, Rogoz, Aribert Mog and Leopold Kramer. Music and lyrics by Kola Jozsef, Hadju Imre, Henry Gershwin and William Colligan. English dialogue by Jacques A. Koerpel. Directed by Gustav Machaty. Reviewed Friday night by W. A. Whitney.

Before a capacity audience, headed by representatives of the Diplomatic Corps, the prize-winning Czechoslovak motion picture, "Ecstacy," was given its Washington premiere last evening in the Belasco Theater.

Nor did five one-reel subjects alleviate the ever-increasing impatience, but rather tended to make more tense the moment that all were awaiting, the unreeling of "Ecstacy," and an outburst of approbation greeted the opening titles.

"Ecstacy" decidedly is not what an inane section of the orchestra stalls thought it would be, for it manifests nothing sufficiently opprobrious to have merited official censure. True the picture is, like many of its "arty" cousins, un-Americanly frank, yet typical of those ventures of certain foreign studios to which the cinema is a true art in itself.

Story Centers in Woman.

Essentially, "Ecstacy" is a study in stark human emotions translated into terms of pantomimic histrionics, of love unrequited and of love fulfilled, depicted by a woman of compelling beauty. It is her struggles with herself and the world which here make for drama in its most tense and poignant form.

One single scene, obviously interpolated into "Extase" to make it "Ecstacy" for the American public, militates against the power of the picture in its present form, the one scene which reverses the manifest intent of the anonymous author, thus making it a trifle absurd in the climatic sequences.

Yet that misapplication of deference to American standards of cinema construction can not detract from the dominating performance of Hedy Kiesler and her search for true happiness when her ideal runs afoul of the matrimonial reefs. Running the gamut of emotions, Mlle. Kiesler is ever repressed, quiet and unobtrusive, drawing from every movement of eyes and lips, of hands and arms and body, volumes of eloquent commentary on her harassment of mind and spirit.

Support Is Excellent.

As the husband, Jaromir Rogoz is superb in a sort of unresponsive way, also making the most of pantomime. His meticulously precise movements, his deft manipulation of his pince-nez add further to the effect of his performance. Aribert Mog, the engineer who also loves Mlle. Kiesler, is splendid. Leopold Kramer, as Mlle. Kiesler's father, appears well in a small part.

No little credit for the excellence of the film is due Director Gustav Machaty for slowly pacing the drama, yet at the same time keeping it moving unrelentlessly to an inevitable end. The unnamed cameraman has done a truly remarkable job.

The auxiliary program at last eveevening's performance consisted of "Die Freischmetz Overture," played by the Orchestra du Conservatoire de Paris; Mendelssohnn's "Lengal's Cave" overture, played by an unnamed orchestra under the direction of Hans Langer; "Don Quixote," a Comi-Color cartoon travesty on the Cervantes yarn; "In Old New Orleans," a travelogue of the Southern city, and a release of the Pathe News.

Gracefully wearing the badge of a capacity week at the Earle, "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" moved around the corner and down F street to the Metropolitan Theater yesterday to continue its triumphant downtown first-run.

The sensational success enjoyed by this latest of the Frank Capra productions for Columbia is wholly understandable. It possesses a plausible and shrewdly contrived story, sprightly dialogue, fine character drawing, an opulent material investiture and a final courtroom scene that strikes a new high note in human interest, sound comedy and straight thinking.

All this is intrusted to a cast that could not have been selected with better judgment for the tasks at hand. Garry Cooper, in the role of Longfellow Deeds, writer of poetic sentiments for postcard publication, has a part completely to his liking and plays it with all of the naturalness and simple charm that characterized his work as the young automobile mechanic opposite Marlene Dietrich in "Desire." In this subject, however, he has opposite him that engaging young actress, Jean Arthur, who is no less perfectly fitted with the role of the newspaper reporter who made life miserable for the small-town youth with whom she fell in love.

Supporting these two are a long list of competent players, led by George Bancroft, Lionel Stander, Douglas Dumbrille, Raymond Walburn, H. B. Warner, Spencer Charters, Emma Dunn, Ruth Donnelly, Warren Hymer, Walter Catlett, John Wray and many others.

A full-length issue of the newsreel, combining both the Universal and Paramount events of the week, and added short reels supplement a feature that may be relied upon for a complete evening's entertainment of the first rank, unassisted.

RKO-Keith's

"A CONNECTICUT YANKEE IN KING ARTHUR'S COURT." Twentieth Century-Fox revival of the Fox picturization based on the story by Mark Twain, adapted to the screen by William Conselman, starring the late Will Rogers, supported by Myrna Loy, William Farnum, Maureen O'Sullivan, Frank Albertson, Brandon Hurst and Mitchell Harris. Directed by David Butler. Reviewed Friday afternoon by W. A. Whitney.

Doubly out of the past has come a picture this week which earlier was, and still is, a great comedy. "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," despite its age—as cinematographich age goes—retains its disarming anachronistic charm in an unabated degree.

The first of the pictures which definitely led the late Will Rogers away from his then accustomed practice of commenting on current events and toward the development of a character in terms of the character itself, "A Connecticut Yankee," is a particularly happy revival.

One need not recapitulate the narrative qualities of this picture, which are still remembered as well as those of the earlier stage work, and still earlier book, on which both were based. Where the stage play took advantage of the possibilities, and modernized them beyond the imagination of Mark Twain, so has the picture gone forward along this tack and brought the yarn to the early '30s.

It is grand comedy—a comedy spontaneously played and staged against the story-book atmosphere of King Arthur.

Worthy Rogers Vehicle.

Of Will Rogers one should say no more: his was a brilliant career and one which shall long remain a cherished memory. Surely, the catholic esteem and kindly regard in which he was, and is, held cannot but be further enhanced by periodic revivals of such excellent motion pictures as this one.

William Farnum, as King Arthur; Myrna Loy, as Queen Morgan Le-Fay, his sister; Maureen O'Sullivan, as the Princess Alisande; Frank Albertson, as Clarence, later Sir Rogers de Claremore; Brandon Hurst, as the villainous Merlin, and Mitchell Harris, as the conniving Sagramor, combine their talents to give the star admirable support.

Chief among the supplementary attractions is another release of "Major Bowes' Theater of the Air," presenting among others the Harmonica Trio, Vivian Barlow (who presents a Mae West-Zasu Pitts colloquy), Doc Curum and his wagon show, Al Reynolds, the Chanticleer Quartet and Leonard Peter. "Spark Plug" is another of the Barney Google series of color cartoons. A release of the Pathe News rounds out a program particularly notable for its feature picture.

"THREE TIMES THE HOUR." The Theater Group of the Federal Bureau of Investigation presents the mystery drama in three acts by Valentine Davies, under the direction of Clarence W. Moore. At Roosevelt High School, April 24.

In its first full-length drama since its unanimous decision in the one-act play tournament, the Theater Group of the Federal Bureau of Investigation last evening presented Valentine Davies' mystery thriller, "Three Times the Hour," in the auditorium of the Theodore Roosevelt High School.

And what could or would be more logical for G-men turned actors than a drama of this picture? True to form, the machinators were tracked to their lairs, and everything turns out all right in the end. Before achieving that end, however, a dramatic concoction of rather unusual composition was offered. In the three acts there were represented the same hour's events on three floors in the home of Banker Blake.

With a bank failure and a murder to afford the Federal agents their thespian meat, the players proceeded to maintain their professional reputation as well as that established with the shorter "The Game of Chess."

In the principal roles were John Hurley, Clayton Braathon, and Fordyce Lyman, all of the former success; Samuel Schmerler, J. Francis Buckley, Thomas E. Devlin, Garland E. Pyles, Dorothy Hair, Francis J. Crane, Pauline Soyer. In the supporting company were William D. Patrick, Dorothy Schwartz, Donald Chase, M. Eleanor Spates, Carlisle F. Smyth, Conrad Kleinman, Lucille Barschke, Dorothy Howe, Alvin Ostholthoff, Irma Barry, Thomas F. Simpson, Vincent J. Kirby and the ubiquitous George Spelvin.

The play was directed by Clarence W. Moore.

Columbia

"LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY." David O. Selznick's picturization for United Artists of the Frances Hodgson Burnett story, adapted to the screen by Hugh Walpole, starring Freddie Bartholomew, with Dolores Costello Barrymore, C. Aubrey Smith, Guy Kibbee, Henry Stephenson, Mickey Rooney, Constance Collier, Una O'Connor, Jackie Searl, Jessie Ralph, Ivan Simpson, May Beatty, Lionel Belmore, Lawrence Grant, Walter Kingsford, Robert Emmett O'Connor and scores more. Directed by John Cromwell. Reviewed Friday morning (repeat run) by Sally Stroud.

There may be small boys today like little Lord Fauntleroy of the 1880s. I don't know. About the only small boys I know are the youngsters having a rowdy ball game in the vacant lot next door. I don't know if they have mothers like Dearest. Even in the saccharine '80s Dearest was fine; today she would be marvelous.

The story of how Cedric Errol, of Brooklyn, becomes Lord Fauntleroy, of England, makes generous gifts to deserving people and converts his cynical uncle, the Earl of Darincourt, into an amiable human, is quite as engrossing as when children long ago heard the tale read them by their mothers.

Gone are the curls and the velvet jackets; remaining are the sterling virtues which made the little lord symbolic of all that could be desired in a young gentleman of ten.

Don't make the mistake of supposing this is a teary, dramatically overdone story. It is not. Even if you don't care for child prodigies, you will like Master Bartholomew. At least, when playing in an eating scene, he eats. And he has a fight and gets his face dirty.

All the characters in the Burnett story are present: Dick, Mr. Hobbs, Mrs. McGilcuddy (the apple woman), Dougal (the dog), Mr. Haversham, the impostor who seeks to snatch away Fauntleroy's heritage, and all the others who marched so competently across the pages of the well-loved book.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Community Center Department presents Estelle Wentworth Opera Group in Gilbert and Sullivan's "The Gondoliers," in Roosevelt High School Auditorium Thursday night. Principal characters: Marco and Giuseppe Palmieri, Ray Baine and Eugene Kressin; Gianetta, Virginia Weedon; Tessa, Nina Norman; Duke of Plaza-Toro, Ira Meyer; Duchess of Plaza-Toro, Maxine de Silvia; Casilda, Margaret Horn; Luiz, Richard Hill; Don Alhambra del Bolero, Walter Perry; Inez, Helen Perry. Directed by Estelle Wentworth.

Although William Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan probably never entertained the idea that it would turn out that way, their operettas have proved to be an invaluable boon to amateur organizations. If they had deliberately set out to accomplish that result, they could not have devised a neater combination of easily sustained characters, irresistibly comic situations, witty lines that readily stick in the memory, and music that virtually sings itself. Given a zealous will on the part of the performers, an effective production is assured with a minimum of preparatory labor.

Miss Wentworth's group, already experienced in stage routine, exhibited the requisite zeal in a performance which moved smoothly to the evident enjoyment of a large and approbative audience. The chorus was well trained in matters of diction and rhythm, and the concerted numbers between the principals went without a hitch.

No notable achievements in individual singing are to be recorded as far as tone quality and sonority are concerned. Of the vocal work of the principals one can say that it was conscientious, and that if honors were to be awarded in this department they would go to Margaret Horn and Ray Baine.

Friday Morning Music Club celebrates its semi-centennial year with an entertainment in Barker Hall. Program arranged and directed by Miriam Hilton and the celebration committee: 1936, Gretchen Hood and Dorothy Guion; 1926, Margaret Tolson and Edith Lefevre; 1916, Vera Ross and Ethel Gawler; 1906, Ruby Potter and Lily Garrett; 1896, Dorothy Pierson and Dorothy Tyler; 1886, Maude Sewall and Emma Knorr.

Time turned backward in its flight during the hour occupied by the Friday Morning Music Club's gaities, appropriately titled "In Reverse," as the succeeding scenes showed the changes both in feminine fashions and in the music of the decades. The usual standards of the organization were laid aside, and the spirit of frolic ruled while burlesque usurped the place of seriousness.

Humor is one of the essentials of music, whatever the pronouncements of pundits may be to the contrary. Beethoven would have chuckled to hear how "the music goes 'round and 'round," and Handel would have appreciated the use of one of his stately phrases in "Yes, we have no bananas."

Linke Helps Yanks Lick Nats, 10-2

Senators' Hitting Futile as Pitching; 14 Men Left on Base.

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

New York, April 24.—With Ed Linke presenting runs to the Yankees in various sums ranging from one to five, the Nats succeeded in accumulating their fourth straight beating this afternoon.

Linke pitched the full nine-inning route, but only because of the kind indulgence of Manager Bucky Harris. Pitching and ducking almost in the same motion, the fat boy of the Washington mound staff bounced 17 hits off the Yankees' bats, and the Nats took a 10-2 licking.

But the futility of Linke's pitching was no greater than the futility of the Nats' hitting, such as it was. Against Lefty Gomez, they collected only seven hits, and in the pinches they were as helpless as Linke was out there on the pitching mound.

As early as the fifth inning the defeat became painless for Linke and the Nats, who were already benumbed by a 6-0 lead that the Yankees had compiled.

The only item in which the Nats succeeded in outnumbering the Yankees was in the total of men left on bases. Fourteen Nats waited in vain for teammates to drive 'em home. Seven of 'em got on base by walks issued by Gomez.

The Nats had one chance to restore themselves to the ball game and they muffed that ingloriously. That was in the seventh inning, when, with the bases full and none out, Capt. Buddy Myer, who has been a shining nonentity in the attack of the club all season, calmly took a third strike across the middle and removed the stomach from the threatened rally.

For three innings, Linke and Gomez were locked in a scoreless duel, with the Nats hitless, but the fourth produced a Yankee run after the Nats had wasted singles by Travis and Reynolds. Selkirk, Gehrig and Lazzeri smacked singles to give the Yankees their 1-0 margin.

The fifth produced a typical example of the Nats' impotency for the past week when they failed to get a man past second base despite two singles and a base on balls in succession. Kuhel was thrown out at third in an atempt to take two bases on Millies' single to right.

And then the Yankees won the ball game with a shower of hits against Linke. Ten Yankees went to bat in the fifth, six of 'em hit in a row safely, and five of 'em scored. It happened like this:

Warneke Allows Seven Hits as Cubs Win by 6-1

Chicago, April 24 (AP).—Behind the seven-hit pitching of Lonnie Warneke, the Chicago Cubs took their second straight victory from the Pittsburgh Pirates here today, 6-1.

In winning his second game of the season, Warneke shut the Pirates out for eight innings while his mates were pounding Cy Blanton for five runs in the first four frames. Lonnie fanned five and walked five.

Dodgers Rout Giants Again; Score, 8-2

Mungo Gives New York 8 Hits and Fans 9 as 15,000 Watch.

By the Associated Press.

Brooklyn, April 24.—The Brooklyn Dodgers, beaten three in a row by the Giants in the first series of the season, won their second straight from Bill Terry's crew in Flatbush today, 8-2.

Van Lingle Mungo, making his fifth appearance in 11 games, held the New Yorkers to eight hits and fanned nine while his teammates were getting ten safeties off Castleman, Gabler and Coffman.

There were 15,401 paid customers in the stands, bringing the attendance for the five Giants-Dodgers games this season to around 100,000.

The Dodgers went right to work at the start and scored two runs on singles by Eckhardt, a fielder's choice, a double by Freddy Lindstrom, and an infield fly. They scored two more in the fifth when Gehaghty and Berres singled, Mungo walked, Eckhardt hit a long fly and Hassett doubled. That was the end for Castleman.

Frank Gabler replaced him, and in the sixth he was touched for three straight singles by Taylor, Geraghty, and Berres, which scored another run.

Coffman went into the box for the Giants at the start of the eighth and was in trouble all the way. He walked Taylor, the first man up, and then Geraghty also scored when Koenig threw wild to first in an attempt to throw out Mungo, and the third run of the inning went across the plate on an infield out.

The Giants scored their first run in the second on Travis Jackson's double and Gus Mancuso's single, and their other in the eighth when Pinch Hitter Jim Ripple doubled, went to third on Joe Moore's single and scored on Whitehead's short fly to Eckhardt.

Appleton Faces Mackmen Today As Nats Return

Fresh from their unexpected triumphs over the costly Boston Red Sox in their last two games with that club, the inexpensive Philadelphia Athletics will invade Griffith Stadium today for a four-game series with the Nats.

Owner Clark Griffith disclosed last night that Pete Appleton, the rejuvenated minor leaguer, will get the pitching assignment today and His Honor Buck Newsom tomorrow.

Hard it by illness on their recent trip, the Nats now have Earl Whitehill, Cliff Bolton, Jimmy DeShong and Johnny Stone on the sick list. Stone came in day before yesterday from Boston, DeShong from a Philadelphia hospital and Bolton yesterday from New York. Bronchial colds are bothering the quartet.

DeShong worked out briefly yesterday, however, but neither he nor Whitehill will be ready before Monday or Tuesday for action.

MacFayden Yields 6 Hits as Bees Win

Boston, April 24 (AP).—Danny MacFayden held the Phillies to six hits while striking out seven of them today to give the Boston Bees a 4-1 victory and an even split in the two-game series.

The Bees landed on Curt Davis for 10 hits and counted single runs in the second, fifth, sixth and seventh innings. The Phillies bunched two of their hits, a triple by Dolph Camilli and Mike Haslin's single, to score their lone run in the fourth frame.

Detroit also executed three double plays.

Princeton, Penn, Columbia to Row

New York, April 24 (U.P.).—Columbia, Princeton and Pennsylvania will open the New York rowing season tomorrow, racing for the historic Childs Cup on the Harlem River.

Five veterans aboard the Pennsylvania shell have established the Quakers as favorites, but Columbia, boasting a victory over Navy last week, may prove an upset. The trophy, donated by the late Philadelphia publisher, George W. Childs, in 1879, has been won 11 times by Pennsylvania, 9 times by Columbia and 8 times by Princeton. Cornell, two-time winner of the trophy, did not enter the event this year.

Because of tidal conditions the varsity race is scheduled for 11 a. m. It will be preceded by a lightweight crew race between Princeton and Columbia over a mile and five-sixteenths, and the freshman and junior races between Penn, Princeton and Columbia.

De Pauw U. Is No Puzzle To Cards in Exhibition

Greencastle, Ind., April 24 (AP).—The St. Louis Cardinals clowned their way through an exhibition baseball game with DePauw University here today and won, 16 to 3.

The Cards pounded three DePaw hurlers for 21 hits, including a home run by Johnny Mize. Jess Haines and McGee allowed the collegians only five blows, good for three runs.

Score:

Detroit Makes Triple Play, Wins, 9-3

Browns Also Are Victims of Three Double Plays; Bell Hits Homer.

St. Louis, April 24.—The tremendous clouting and sparkling fielding of the Detroit Tigers was so outstanding today in the world champions' 9 to 3 defeat of the St. Louis Browns that Beau Bell's ninth inning home run for the home team received scant notice.

Bell's blow to the roof of the pavilion was his third straight safety of the day and the only circuit clout of the game but it came too late to aid the Browns who surprised the fans by drubbing Detroit two straight earlier in the week.

An error by Harlan Clift started Earl Caldwell's downfall in the second but before he was removed for Elton Walkup the solid hits of the Tigers had accounted for six runs.

In the fourth came the season's first triple play—a rarity even in the majors. Tommy Bridges was weakening, two Browns were on base and none out. Jim Bottomley smashed a line drive that looked good for a hit. Charley Gehringer dragged it down, tossed to Bill Rogel to double Sammy West off second and Rogell whipped the ball swiftly to first before Julius Solters could get back. This heartened Bridges and he was able to complete the game.

Detroit also executed three double plays.

Ali Baba, in Surprise, Pins Shikat to Mat

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, April 24.—Ali Baba, fierce-visioned Turkish wrestler, became a new claimant to the world heavyweight wrestling championship tonight by pinning Dick Shikat in 46 minutes and 40 seconds. The match was at Olympia Sports Arena.

Detroit is not one of the five cities which Jack Curley, wrestling impressario, yesterday named in a Columbus (Ohio) court as splitting mat-show profits under an alleged "trust" agreement.

Ali Baba has been wrestling in this country for about a year. His ferocious gestures have made him a favorite here, where he has wrestled under the promotion of Adam Weissmuller.

Ex-Boston Hurler Limits Old Mates to 8 Hits.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, April 24.—Boston fell before the Athletics, 3 to 1, again today. The Mackmen scored all their runs in the opening inning, when they chased Johnny Marcum to cover.

Dusty Rhodes, secured from the Sox in the winter deals, kept the loser's eight hits scattered over eight innings. A home run hit by Pinch Hitter Dusty Cooke in the ninth robbed Rhodes of a shut-out triumph.

Kojac Sets World Mark In 400 Meter Swim

New York, April 24. (U.P.).—George Kojac, of New York, Olympic 100-meter back stroke champion in 1928, tonight set a world record for 400 meters in the Downtown Athletic Club swimming meet.

Kojac swam 440 yards—2 yards longer than 400 meters—in 5 minutes 16:4 seconds, shattering the 400-meter mark of 5 minutes 17.8 seconds, set by Adolf Kiefer, of Chicago, in 1935.

Kojac, who now is a physician, worked all day taking care of his patients in a New York hospital. A short time before he was scheduled to swim, Kojac drank a cup of tea and took a taxi to the pool, where he turned in his remarkable performance.

Walsh Wins British Title.

Liverpool, April 24 (U.P.).—Jimmy Walsh, Liverpool, tonight won the British lightweight championship by scoring a technical knockout over Jackie (Kid) Berg, London. The referee stopped the scheduled 15-rounder in the ninth when it was apparent Berg could no longer defend himself. Each weighed 133½.

Tribe Defeats Chisox, 6-2; Errors Aid

Trosky and Averill Slam Homers; 3-Run Rally in Seventh Decides.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, April 24.—A pair of home runs and three costly Chicago errors in one inning presented the Cleveland Indians with a 6-to-2 victory over the White Sox today in their concluding game of the series here.

Hal Trosky, Tribe first baseman, walloped his fourth circuit clout of the season. Outfielder Earl Averill connected for his first homer. The Indians are at the top of the league.

Although the Sox found Mel Harder, in his first home appearance this year, for 11 hits, compared to the Indians' 10, the Tribe clinched the victory with a three-run rally in the seventh through the aid of three Sox errors.

Hughes reached first when Mule Haas dropped Stratton's throw in opening the seventh. He stole second, advanced to third as Luke Appling allowed Luke Sewell's throw to get away. Tony Piet picked up the ball, threw to catch Hughes but it hit Hughes on the head. The runner reached home as the ball bounded into the Sox dugout.

Pfefer Claims Historic Victory

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 24.—Down the sports trail:

Grunts and Hisses . . . Jack Pfefer, a tiny Russian who works 20 hours a day, eats his meals on a gallop and disguises himself about once a year by getting a hair cut, claims he has made a flying tackle that will go down as the greatest in the history of wresting.

"After three years of working 20 hours a day, I've kicked the daylight out of the Jack Curley wrestling combine," laughed the little Russian. "I've got 'em on the run. Dick Shikat gave them one of the slickest double crosses in all wrestling history to get a chance at Danno O'Mahoney and the championship. He beat the Irishman and quit them cold. And they're licked."

As he whirled around in his swivel chair, digging his hands into a pile of papers and telegrams, Pfefer talked the language of the wrestler. He explained them. A "flapperjack" is a wrestler who flops when so ordered. A "lumbago" is a wrestler after he gets licked. A "policeman" is a man assigned by a combine to smash a challenger who looks too good. The most noted "policeman" was Johnny Pesek, the "Nebraska tiger man." Pesek wrestled as a top notcher for 15 years without winning a title, but he made a quarter of a million dollars, Pfefer said.

Where are they now? Pesek wrestles occasionally but devotes most of his time to his Nebraska farm. George Hackenschmidt is living a life of ease in London and on the French Riviera. Stanislaus Zbyszko promotes wrestling in Buenos Aires. Earl Caddock promoted out of Omaha. Joe Stecher promotes with his brother Tony in Minneapolis. Charlie Cutler runs a night club in Chicago. Ernest Rober and George Boethner are referees in New York.

Unlucky Money—Al Mayer, the sad-faced man who used to conduct Luis Angel Firpo on his fight tours, made $200,000 and is broke. So is Firpo, who is running a gasoline filling station in South America and threatening a fistic comeback.

"All money won in the ring is unlucky money," Mayer said, shaking his head. "No one seems to be able to hang on to it. Look 'em over. Jack Dempsey has to work for a living, and so do all the rest."

Daily Double Pays $23.90 Mutuel

Tiempo Comes Through in Sixth With Long Expected Victory.

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace Track, April 24. The largest and the smallest horses in a field of six battled to a nose decision here today and beef won. Dark Hope, the giant campaigner belonging to J. W. Y. Martin, took the measure of Dancing Doll, the tiny miss owned by Mrs. A. W. Abbott. Accolade was third in the six furlong sprint called the Mayfair for some reason or another.

It was an interesting contest for $.000 present. The field was small enough and the colors assorted enough to allow everybody to follow his horse and the stretch struggle was keen. The outcome was particularly pleasing to those who backed the chances of Dark Hope and participated in the resulting $6.90 mutuel. The gelded son of Traumer was clocked in 1:12 2-5.

Dancing Doll did the expected in forging to the front at the starting bell and Dark Hope, in competition for the first time this year, surprised by being a close third in the run along the backstretch.

At the far turn Dark Hope had moved up on Dancing Doll, while Accolade, which had been running second, had dropped back a bit. Swinging into the stretch, Dancing Doll began to draw out slightly and it was than that Jockey Bobby Jones went to the whip. Slowly but surely Dark Hope narrowed Dancing Doll's margin and then at the wire the big horse poked his nose in front.

Although the daily double had possibilities ranging up to $4,356.70 had Sir Windsor won the third race, the pay-off was only $23.90. Redley, the favorite, took the completing end of the twin wager after Exaggeration had won the first half.

Exaggeration, a gray 3-year-old, triumphed in the first race at a mile and 70 yards. Expertly handled by Apprentice Jockey H. Leblanc, the son of Kiev was under slight restraint while holding a forward position until nearing the stretch where he disposed of Dixie Dora, the pace-setter, which finished second. Droll Story, racing greenly, was third in the field of a dozen. Exaggeration paid a $12.30 mutuel.

An odds-on favorite made good in the second race when Mrs. J. V. Stewart's Ejector gained a set of winning brackets with a smashing race over the juvenile sprint course. Ridden by Carl Hanford, Ejector wrested the lead from Cathy P in the stretch and was opening a daylight lead at the end. Cathy P hung on well to take second money from White Sweets. The winner paid $3.90.

The favorite players made it two victories in a row by backing Redley, a black son of Victorian. Carl Hanford, riding his second winner of the day, once more allowed a rival to set the pace. In the straightaway, however, he turned Redley loose long enough to hold Dainger Lewis safe to win by a length. Golden Hind, which broke on top, managed to stagger into third money. Redley rewarded the faithful with a $4.40 mutuel.

Transporter, owned by Mrs. M. Dupont Somerville and trained by Selby Burch, at Washington, toyed with a field of four others in the fifth race, the Pagebrook Purse. Under heavy restraint to the stretch turn Transporter took command when called upon and was only galloping ahead of Bootless at the end. Night Cap was third. The winner was the third favorite of the day to score and paid $3.60.

Tiempo, owned by L. C. Smithson, made every post a winning one in the sixth race over the mile and a sixteenth route. Capably handled by Jockey Mose Peters, Tiempo sprinted into the lead at once and easily held Pumice Stone safe in the final drive. Last Romance closed some ground in the late stages to be third. The winner paid $12.70.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—EXAGGERATION, $12.30, $6.10, $4.80; DIXIE DORA, $4.60, $4.40; DROLL STORY (entry), $7.60.

EXAGGERATION, prominent from the beginning, rallied gamely in the last quarter mile and, closing stoutly, wore DIXIE DORA down in the closing furlong to win under hard urging. DIXIE DORA outran her field for the first turn, went along under slight restraint while setting the pace, saved ground, but failed to withstand the winner when placed to punishment. DROLL STORY, close up from the beginning, made repeated efforts and held on gamely. CORVUS could not improve his position in the late stages. STACK ARMS began tiring after six furlongs. SUMAC improved his position steadily, but could not menace the leaders. BLOND JESTER was never dangerous. ROYAL BALLAD showed a dull effort. The others were outrun.

SECOND RACE—Four and one-half furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 2-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:07. Off at 3:11½. Winner, Mrs. J. V. Two-dollar mutuels paid—EJECTOR, $3.90, $2.70, $2.40; CATHY P., $2.90, $2.70; WHITE SWEETS, $4.40.

EJECTOR, a keen factor from the beginning, responded to punishment to wear CATHY P. down when straightened into the homestretch, was kept under stout urging and came out slowly at the close. CATHY P. showed good speed while setting the pace, saved ground and continued gamely when the real test came. WHITE SWEETS held a forward position all during the running, but could not threaten the leaders. PASS 'EM BY broke fast, but would not extend himself in the early racing. He was taken to the outside and came with good speed in the late stages. SILVER PALM went evenly. GAUL was outrun. SCOUT PLANE was done after three-sixteenths. GOLDCRAFT and AQUARIAN were badly outrun.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000. For maiden 3-year-olds. Start good from stall gates in chute. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:41. Off at 3:47. Winner, Brandywine Stable's blk. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—REDLEY, $4.40, $3.10, $3.00; DAINGER LEWIS, $5.40, $6.00; GOLDEN HIND, $8.10.

REDLEY, following closest to the pacemaker from the beginning, responded readily when shaken up in the last five-sixteenths, withstood a drive willingly and came out gradually after disposing of GOLDEN HIND in the last furlong. DAINGER LEWIS settled in his stride after the opening furlong, swung to the outside and finished resolutely. GOLDEN HIND displayed keen speed to move into a clear lead early, saved ground all the way, but tired suddenly in the last furlong. FIGHT TALK raced to the outside from the beginning, made a wide turn into the homestretch, then closed stoutly when straightened out. BETTER FORGET finished with a belated rush while weaving his way between his horses. MISS MARED closed a good gap. BLUE ALICE was unable to enter contention. GOLD CLIP was done after five furlongs. PER DIEM lacked speed.

DAILY DOUBLE (FIRST AND THIRD RACES) PAID $23.90.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—DARK HOPE, $6.90, $4.00, $2.70; DANCING DOLL, $4.70, $2.90; ACCOLADE, $2.30.

DARK HOPE, reserved from the fast early pace but within reach of the leaders, responded well under vigorous handling when called upon, disposed of ACCOLADE entering the stretch and was up in the final stride. DANCING DOLL had enough speed to set the pace from the start, saved ground throughout and just failed to last. ACCOLADE forced the fast early pace, but weakened from his efforts and was tiring. PALAMEDE raced evenly, but could never get up. FIRETHORN lacked speed to keep up in the early racing. He closed some ground in the final furlong. OFFICIAL weakened early.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; allowances. The Page Brook. For 3-year-olds. Start good and fast from stall gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:51. Off at once. Winner, Mrs. M. Du P. Somerville's ch. c. (3), by The Porter—Sun Armes. Trained by L. L. Burch. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Two-dollar mutuels paid—TRANSPORTER, $3.60, $2.70, $2.10; BOOTLESS, $3.70, $2.30; NIGHT CAP, $2.20.

TRANSPORTER, squeezed back going to the first turn, went to the outside when straightened into the backstretch, took command readily when reaching the final turn, saved ground thereafter and was mildly shaken up in the last furlong to withstand. BOOTLESS, latter, kept within striking distance of the leaders, responded gamely when put to a drive and finished courageously. NIGHT CAP was used up racing with MAXINE F. and failed to menace when the real test came. MAXINE F. had good speed for seven furlongs, then weakened. PHANTOM FOX was overmatched and was a trailer for the entire trip.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward; fillies and mares. Start good from stall gates. Won ridden out; place, driving. Went to post at 5:21. Two-dollar mutuels paid—TIEMPO, $12.70, $5.20, $4.80; PUMICE STONE, $4.00, $3.40; LAST ROMANCE, $4.20.

TIEMPO, second nearly improved, was rated up front after gaining command at the first turn, rallied nicely when shaken up in the last quarter-mile and outstayed PUMICE STONE under pressure. PUMICE STONE followed close to the winner from the beginning and continued with good energy when the real test came. LAST ROMANCE improved her position on the outside and came gamely in the final drive. INFILEE closed gamely after being slow to get into full stride. JAKOVIA weakened in the last five-sixteenths. PEPPERY went into the air when the break came and was never dangerous. FLYING DERE appeared very sore on parade and was done after six furlongs.

SEVENTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:51. Off at 5:53½. Two-dollar mutuels paid—IDLE ALONG, $11.20, $5.40, $3.80; KINDACORN, $10.80, $6.50; SPARKY, $3.60.

IDLE ALONG had good speed to take command in the backstretch, was well rated in front, saved ground throughout and held KINDACORN safe under vigorous handling. KINDACORN, reserved from the early pace, moved up readily when called upon and continued gamely. SPARKY, always a contender, was given a respite on the final turn and closed with good speed. HOOPS lacked early speed, gradually improved his position after a half-mile while racing on the outside and closed stoutly. MANAGER BILL had speed, but tired badly. FIRST PIGEON encountered slight interference on the final turn.

Jamaica Race Won By Crystal Prince

By the Associated Press.

Jamaica, N. Y., April 24.—Tearing down to the finish line so closely locked that the photo finish was deemed necessary to decide the winner, A. T. Partridge's Crystal Prince and William Woodward's Merry Pete were placed in that order by the judges in today's feature, a Grade "C" handicap.

Ira (Babe) Hanford, recovering from a cold in time to accept mounts and increase his lead over local rivals this afternoon, drove the 7-year-old gelding to victory and thereby earned his second straight success in the saddle. Crystal Prince and Merry Pete were solit choices at 2 to 1. A half dozen lengths behind came C. V. Whitney's Singer's Folly to take third money. Glastonbury and Brindle completed the field as named. The time for one mile and 0 yards was 1:43 1-5.

Merry Pete, named for the Derby and Preakness, was backed down to his closing price.

Havre de Grace, April 24.—Fourteen horses have been named for the $7,500 added Philadelphia Handicap, tomorrow's feature event over the mile and a sixteenth course . . . about ten of this number will face Starter Milton . . . the Vanderbilt forces have named four—Gallant Mac, Good Harvest, Good Gamble and Purple Knight . . . but Trainer Stotler says two will be scratched . . . if the track remains fast, Good Gamble and Gallant Mac will carry the cerise and white into action . . . Good Harvest and Purple Knight will be ready if the mud comes . . . which is unlikely . . . the naming of Bright Light, Official and Black Gift for the stake was something of a surprise . . . Sablin was another which was not generally considered . . . at this stage of the campaign, this is a very open race . . . Psychic Bid, Thursday, Howard, Stand Pat and Cycle will have backers . . . Bright Light could jolt this gang, I believe . . . my special today was Idle Along, a winner . . . I'm going to take Cachalot for tomorrow . . . and if you would play a long, long-shot, you might try Silent Don . . . Moose Peters is leading Cliff Stafford, 10 winners to 8 in the race for the jockey title here and the $500 stop watch . . . Baydrop and Tuleyries Wand are now on the schooling list . . . Nelson B. Central Outlasts Tech to Win, 12 to 9, in Series Inaugural

Victors Chase 11 Runs Over In Sixth

By John R. Vosburgh.

Tech and Central extended their visit at Griffith Stadium yesterday almost to the bounds of hospitality as they waded through more than three hours of baseball before Central emerged with a 12-9 victory.

It was the opening game of the interhigh series and appropriately inaugurated with a slow pitch by none other than Clark Griffith. The Old Fox did not make the opening throw from the pitcher's box, however, but from one of the boxes near the Central dugout.

The teams were opening the series for the third successive huge trophy donated by the owner of the Nats. They were playing in the ball park at his invitation, but their host failed to stay to the finish.

As it was, he probably saw nine innings worth of baseball through the first six innings. Until that point, it was a fast, high-caliber schoolboy ball game, but when Tech's pitchers began dealing out bases on balls in mass fashion and Central scored 11 runs as an indirect result, the complexion of the contest changed radically.

Lynchburg, Va., April 24 (AP).—American University lost a Chesapeake conference track meet to Lynchburg College this afternoon by score of 71 to 55.

Aldo Cipolat, of Lynchburg, was high score man, capturing 17 points and Harvey Nichols, a Hornet freshman, came next with 15.

Anderson, Sprint Hope, Hangs Up His Spikes

Berkeley, Calif., April 24 (AP).—George Anderson, University of California sprinter who ran the hundred in 9.5 seconds two years ago as a freshman, definitely hung up his spikes today for the season, costing America a strong candidate for the 1936 Olympic team.

Stansbury Leads Duckpin Tourney

New leaders popped up like spring flowers down through the lists in the city duckpin bowling championship tournament in progress at Arcadia last night, with a battle among teams in Class C featuring the evening. The evening's activities were dedicated to the Masons in the city.

Stansbury rolled into the Class C teams' lead on the powerful performance of 1,698, while Potomac took second place by virtue of its 1,666 score, barely saving that position from King David, which turned in a 1,664 card.

In Class E teams Takoma, aided by G. E. Davis' triple-header strike—second of the tournament—assumed the lead with a 1,522 score. A new leader arose in the Class F singles in the person of Ed Giovannetti, whose 336 total automatically raised him to the top of the heap.

National Savers Bow To American Security

American Security & Trust Co. took a step out ahead of the rest of the field in the Bankers League of The Washington Post Association yesterday on the Ellipse with a 2-to-1 victory over National Savings & Trust Co. It was the winner's second league victory and the first defeat for National Savings, which upset Hibbs in the opener Monday.

The game evolved into a pitcher's battle between Orlando Burch, of American, and Burrell and Joe Garvey, of Savings. The latter pair allowed seven hits and Burch allowed six.

American Security won the ball game in the seventh when Gotthardt and Miller singled to center, Holingsworth walked and Godfrey fumbled Talley's hard-hit drive. Gotthardt scoring with the winning run.

Bethesda-Chevy Chase Bows to Roosevelt, 12-5

With the Coakley brothers leading the attack, Roosevelt handed a first-class beating to Bethesda-Chevy Chase yesterday on the Rough Riders' diamond, winning by the one-sided count of 12 to 5. Bauer received credit for the victory.

Seeing that his charges were winning as they pleased, Coach Herman Littman allowed his whole squad to participate. Seventeen Roosevelt players saw action. George Coakley accounted for the only home run of the game.

Raiford Checks RFC To Give WPA 13-3 Win

Behind the stellar pitching of Lee Raiford, former Roosevelt High luminary, the Works Progress Administration trounced the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, 13 to 3, yesterday on the North Ellipse.

Batting honors went to Frank Parks, WPA third-baseman, who collected 4 hits in 5 trips to the plate. He accounted for a home-run and a triple.

Javelin Record Set in Drake Relays

By the Associated Press.

Des Moines, Iowa, April 24.—Ray Ellinwood, the University of Chicago's great sophomore, middle-distance Olympic hope, ripped off a brilliant last-minute performance today to prevent a pair of field event stars, Husky Sam Francis, of Nebraska, and Alton Terry, of Hardin-Simmons, from stealing all the first-day glory in the twenty-seventh annual Drake relays.

Francis, a prize Cornhusker backfield star, had given a crowd of 9,000 track and field enthusiasts a big share of its thrills by winning the discus and leading the qualifiers in the short-put. Terry had turned in the only record performance of the day, a rousing heave of 219.36 feet in the javelin.

Ellinwood, running anchor on the Maroon 1-mile relay team in the qualifying trials, brought the crowd to its feet for the last time by overcoming a 5-yard handicap to conquer Winslow (Sonny) Heg, Northwestern speedster, and win by 2 yards.

Chicago Is Favorite.

Chicago's time, 3 minutes 19.4 seconds, was well short of the meet record of 3:15.9 set by the University of California at Los Angeles, in 1934, but it was the outstanding relay effort of the day. Chicago became the favorite for the finals tomorrow and a record was an outside possibility.

Handicapped by a stiff southwest wind that blew dust and cinders in their faces, the sprinters and hurdlers failed to accomplish anything exceptional, and most of the relays were slowed up accordingly.

Francis, winner of the shot-put in the Texas and Kansas relays, achieved an upset in conquering big Jess Petty, of Rice Institute, the 1935 victor, in the discus. The Cornhusker unwound a good toss of 149.76 feet, to defeat Petty, whose best effort was 147.29 feet. The Nebraska husky came back less than a half hour later to toss the 16-pound shot 50 feet 7 inches, best of the qualifying efforts.

Terry established himself at the top of the javelin qualifiers by adding nearly 9 feet to the old meet record of 210.74 feet achieved by Mark Panther, of Iowa, a year ago. Panther qualified with a toss of 191.05 feet, finished third behind Terry and Ward Cuff, of Marquette, whose best was 201.51 feet.

5,500 Enter Olympics.

Berlin, April 24 (U.P.).—Fifty-two nations have entered 5,500 athletes in the summer Olympics and 6,500 men and women have been engaged to participate in gymnastic exhibitions, latest Olympics statistics showed today.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

NEW YORK, April 24.—I see by the late editions that the poverty-stricken Athletics have just finished off the nouveau riche Red Sox in another ball game, making it two straight, and if that is a galling dose to Mr. Tom Yawkey then the man owns a philosophy that rates a niche in the Smithsonian Institution.

POVICH.

Mr. Yawkey had a right (purchased for $400,000) to expect different results. If there were one team in the league that his Red Sox were supposed to lick with great frequency, it was these same Athletics, whom Yawkey had apparently wrecked with great finality last winter. With the rubber unwound from his bankroll he had subtracted from the A's their few remaining stars—Jimmy Foxx, Roger Cramer, Johnny Marcum and Eric McNair—and grafted them onto his Boston club in a terrific spending spree.

They were all in there today playing for Boston, and what happened? Why, one of Mr. Yawkey's cast-offs, Dusty Rhodes, a pitcher who had been tossed into the Boston-Philadelphia trade last December like the thirteenth bun in a baker's dozen, beats the great Marcum in a 3-1 pitching duel and renders Mr. Yawkey's expensive Boston sluggers quite helpless.

It might not have been so bad, but for the fact that it was the second straight day on which Connie Mack's collection of nondescripts had plastered a convincing licking on Mr. Yawkey's golden stitched Sox. The day before a fellow named Harry Kelly, whom Connie Mack had brought up from Atlanta at the waiver price, dealt Mr. Yawkey's team another bitter dose of pitching, holding 'em to three hits while Mack's sandlot graduates were shellacking Mr. Yawkey's high-priced man, Wes Ferrell.

All of which implies that pennants cannot be bought. But that is hardly true. The Yankees bought three in a row back in '21, '22 and '23 when they raided the Boston Red Sox and purchased such stars as Babe Ruth, Carl Mays, Herb Pennock, Waite Hoyt, Joe Bush and Wally Schang, and if Mr. Yawkey's dough holds out, he, too, will finally get a pennant in receipt.

But what happened up in Shibe Park these last two days represents one of baseball's chief charms—its uncertainties. Nothing can be taken for granted in the game. The bum of the day before is apt to turn hero in 24 hours and vice versa, and the eighth-place team can knock off the league leaders in any given game and occasion no surprise whatsoever. Over a 154-game schedule, the best team may prevail, but from day to day the underdog has its moments.

It is, too, a healthy condition for baseball. When the game reaches that state of perfection and mathematical certainty that the defeat of the underdog is a foregone conclusion, then seven clubs in each league might just as well rack up inasmuch as there can be but one winner. But the vagaries of baseball are such, as anyone knows, that every ball club has a chance to upset even the most carefully planned apple-carts.

It's different in other sports. The best tennis player will knock off an inferior opponent every day in the month, and the best race horse will outrun cheaper opposition, barring bad racing luck, any time they take the track, but that gem of consistency is missing in baseball, where a fraction of an inch on the surface of the bat can transform a potential line drive home run into a weak pop to the catcher.

In Short.

Opposing pitchers' cute habit of dusting off Washington players has done the Nats no good on their road trip . . . In Boston, Fritz Ostermueller aimed one at Buddy Myer's head with the bases full and succeeded in scaring him away from the plate . . . And in New York, Charley Ruffing cut loose a pitch at Estalella's head that later cowed the Cuban into striking out . . . Any pitcher can get away with a bean ball once during a game with only a warning from the umpires . . . A day laborer among artisans is Harry Conn, batting practice pitcher of the Nats . . . He is paid a weekly salary for his services and when play begins his work is done . . . He has pitched from every mound in the American League, but his name has yet to appear in any boxscore . . . His value lies not in the stuff he puts on the ball but in his control . . . With only 20 minutes of batting practice afforded the visiting club, Manager Harris is averse to wasting any hitting time against pitchers who can't get the ball over the plate.

District Ring Board Picks Chairman, 2 New Champs

By Bill McCormick.

A new chairman was elected, two new District champions were named and one local title declared vacant at a meeting of the Boxing Commission yesterday.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of the Metropolitan Police Department and senior member of the commission, was elected chairman, succeeding Fred Buchholz, resigned from the group.

Howard Scott, the transplanted Texas lightweight, was declared ruler of Washington's 135-pound division. Billy Nichy, the Pittsburgh puncher, was named District lightheavyweight titleholder.

The heavyweight title, held by Buck Everett, was declared vacant because of Buck's failure to defend it, and the commission ordained that the winner of an elimination tournament between Everett, Bob Tow, Marty Gallagher, Eddie Mader and Al Delaney would be recognized as king of the big boys here.

Maj. Brown's election to the chairmanship was expected. The Superintendent of Police declined the office once before, but since that time a smooth-working organization has been built up by the commission that will not interfere with his police duties.

Scott is practically the only good lightweight now operating in the District. He has made impressive showings against Eddie Cool and Lew Massey here and scored handily over Joe Rivers and Bucky Taylor in Baltimore.

Nichy, only a bit too heavy for the middleweight division, has shown such impressive form here that he has been very successful in the heavyweight ranks. He plans to continue as a heavyweight, despite the title hung on him by the solons of sock.

The heavyweight elimination tournament, made possible by the commission's edict, is planned to speed up activity here during the forthcoming outdoor season. The opening bout in the tournament probably will be, between Bob Tow and Marty Gallagher at Griffith Stadium early in June.

Everett has not been active in any ring throughout most of the winter, being forced to the sidelines for a long period when he received a severe head cut in a bout with Max Marek in Miami and again being put out of commission before he could get back in harness when he injured his shoulder in a gymnasium wrestling bout.

Heurichs Beat Millers, 10-4, In Opener

New Yorkers Smash Out 17 Safeties; Griffs' Hitting Futile.

By George Considine.

To say that the Industrial Baseball League, of The Washington Post Association, got under way with a bang yesterday on the East Ellipse is vastly to underplay the bristling performance of the Heurich Brewers, defending champions, who banged out a 10-to-4 victory over Miller Furniture.

From the time the immortal Joe Judge tossed out the first ball until the sun buried itself in centerfield, the stands reverbrated with the musical sound of bat on ball, accompanied by the shouts of more than a 1,000 enthusiastic spectators.

Joe Freschi, the Brewers' veteran sandlotter, romped off with most of the individual honors, scoring three runs and making two hits—one of them a triple—in three trips to the plate. The only home run of the game was clouted by Mike Shugrue, of the losers, in the fourth inning.

Although Walter James allowed nine hits, he kept them well scattered and appeared always to have the situation well under control. In the dying moments of the ninth James was nicked for two runs, but since the Brewers had the game sewed up at that time, it may have been just a charitable gesture.

The Brewers showed that they meant business right off the bat. Bennie, the first man up, doubled to left and Collier, who followed him, cracked a beautiful single to start the scoring. From then until the seventh inclusive there wasn't a single inning that didn't see Heurich scoring at least one run.

Mike Shugrue started what looked like a Miller rally with that tremendous home run to left center to start off the fourth inning. But Walter James didn't let it worry him as was definitely proven by two consecutive strike outs.

Montgomery-Blair's Nine Triumphs, 24-7

Scoring at least three runs in every inning except the second, the Montgomery-Blair baseball team gained its second county victory in as many starts yesterday, swamping Sherwood, 24 to 7. Jack Golden pitched for the winners.

The slugfest was featured by Montgomery's eight run performance in the fourth inning. The team batted around twice during this lengthy frame. Wally Robertson collecting a triple and a double.

Central Netmen Win.

Central High opened its bid for the interhigh tennis championship it lost last year by swamping Tech 7 to 0. Led by Buddy Adair and Charlie Channing, two of the city's foremost young netmen, Central lost but one set. It will meet Western, interhigh champions, next week.

Georgetown Host To Maryland Nine

Georgetown's diamond debate with Maryland, an affair that is beginning to mellow with a fierce but friendly rivalry, occupies the feature spot on today's collegiate sports card. The teams will have it out on Georgetown's lot at 3 o'clock.

George Washington's high-powered nine plays host to Naval Apprentice School, of Norfolk, on the East Ellipse diamond at the same hour in the only other ball game booked for today.

But there are other, and for some fans better treats in store. Lacrosse followers have the Maryland-St. John's match at College Park, which should be about one of the hottest of the season. Randolph-Macon's track team will oppose Galludet at Kendall Green and Georgetown's golfers will travel to Annapolis for a match with the Middies.

G. U. Freshmen Down Western's Nine, 6 to 5

A single by Frank Meglen in the eighth inning, scoring Wychunas and Joe Keegan, gave Georgetown University's freshman ball team a 6-to-5 victory over Western High yesterday on the Hilltop. Western had the ball game under control until the late innings.

The high school scored twice in the first an dtwice in the second for a substantial lead of 4 to 0, but Pitcher Lee Kushman weakened perceptibly in the eighth and ninth after holding the collegians to six hits.

24.8 Billions in 5,381 Banks Is Gain of .05% Since December 31.

Comptroller of the Currency J. F. T. O'Connor announced yesterday that the deposits of the 5,381 active national banks in the continental United States, Alaska, Hawaii and the Virgin Islands of the United States, on March 4, the date of the last call made for statements of condition, aggregated $24,859,455,000, which establishes a new high record for national banks, exceeding by $11,722,000, or .05 per cent, and $512,075,000, or 2.10 per cent, the amounts reported on December 31, 1935, and December 31, 1928, respectively, the dates of the two previous high records in the history of the national banking system.

Margin Rule Eased On Small Accounts

New York, April 24 (AP).—The Stock Exchange today adopted changes in its rules for the carrying of customers' margin accounts which had the effect of reducing the amount of margin required on small accounts in a declining market.

In a circular to member firms the exchange announced a change in its regulations which no longer makes it necessary that member firms require of a margin account that it be "self financing."

The exchange also rescinded its ruling that a minimum margin of 50 per cent of the debit balance be required in accounts having debit balances of $5,000 or less.

Topeka, Kans., April 24 (AP).—Homer Hoch, chairman of the State corporation commission, announced late today that the Cities Service Gas Company had filed rate schedules providing reduced charges for domestic gas in 75 Kansas cities and towns. Other members are Mrs. Francis G. Addison, jr.; Mrs. L. Colton, Mrs. Robert V. Fleming, Mrs. Thomas J. Groom, Mrs. T. Stanley Holland, Mrs. Hillearg G. Hoskinson, Mrs. A. Scott Offutt, Mrs. Nelson B. Stocks Get Breathing Spell After First Hour Selling; Decline Loses Momentum.

New York, April 24.—Some relief came to hard-pressed stock markets, and, although no really inspiriting rally took place, a few stocks hardened. Aside from a follow-up of selling in the first hour, to take care of impaired margin accounts and frightened bull traders, the market was steady in tone and closed no worse than irregularly lower on a turnover of around 1,750,000 shares. Bonds also turned firmer. On the whole, Wall Street felt as though selling of securities for the time being had reached a climax, and it welcomed the breathing spell. May wheat closed three-quarters of a cent higher at 101⅛ cents a bushel.

Stocks managed to pull through the dreaded last hour without a recurrence of the heavy barrage of selling that has shattered the defenses of the market in the past few sessions. More encouragement was taken from that fact than from any external influence connected with earnings and other statistics of the business position. On the business side, the week-end news was favorable. The railroads reported for last week a rise in freight car loadings that was ahead of the seasonal turn. A ray of hope shot up that the proposed destructive corporation taxes might be defeated in Congress. Some excellent corporation earnings statements and higher dividends were published.

Chrysler had an unfavorable head wind to buck when it began the morning session, but later when the market turned steadier the price rose a little in response to the quarterly report and the dividend. The motor vehicle section as a whole was fairly firm, in contrast to the indecision in the steel division. Most of the steel shares opened lower and were unable to lead a rally. A handicap to the steel share market is the current tendency to predict a temporary halt to the advance in operating rate.

Sugars Soften.

The worst declines in stocks took place in the foreign sugar section. Fajard, Central Aguirre and South Porto Rico broke 2 to more than 4 points on Puerto Rican independence moves in Congress. Great Western, Holly and American were firm to higher. In farm implements Case and Deere sold lower, but Harvester recovered a little. New low prices for the year were set by some of the steel issues: Acme, Crucible, Inland and Otis. Steel, Bethlehem and others were down 1 to 2 points at their worst, but rallied in the afternoon trading.

Railroad equipment and motor accessory company stocks were irregularly lower. The majority of the rails were quoted lower in the first three hours of trading. Union Pacific and Santa Fe recovered about 25 per cent of their previous day's losses. The Northerns and Nickel Plate were lower. Coast Line had another sinking spell to a new low price for the year. Oils were irregularly higher.

Gold From France.

If some traders have been fearing the effects on stocks of the possible export of gold, to follow devaluation of the franc, they ought to have taken hope today. The first engagement of gold for shipment from Paris to this country, as a result of the franc's decline, was announced today. Other shipments probably will follow, as pressure continues on the franc, the price being supported mostly by the operation of the British control fund.

Meanwhile the use of Treasury funds and further imports of gold in the past week have given excess bank reserves another boost. The increase for the week reported by the Federal Reserve Board was about $90,000,000. Member bank reserve balances rose $109,000,000. That wider base of credit attracted no building. Brokers loans fell with the drop in prices and the passing of the State income tax payments. Business loans are shrinking a little.

Jittery.

The decline in stocks has gone far enough to produce the inevitable case of jitters among some people. They are consequently shutting their eyes to such things as corporation earnings, taxation in prospect, a profligate government, a stupendous public debt, a bull market of a full year's duration, undoubted overbuying of many stocks, new and hard margin requirements, the weather, the crops, the foreign situation, currencies, and the thousand and one influences that govern the fluctuation of security prices.

What happens then, when magic and superstition are substituted for sense, is well illustrated in a note received this morning from a reader who signs himself "Loyalty." "It is fervently hoped," he writes, "that appropriate attention will be given the report going around that our money barons have decided on a 'Roosevelt Panic,' to manipulate the American people from the ensuing elections; the panic to be touched off and kept going by heavy short sales via foreign agents outside the jurisdiction of any American court, commission or other American body."

Cause for Panic.

It is wonderful what the money barons can do, and they will have to hold higher titles than barons to match with their puny millions the billions and billions that the Roosevelt New Dealers and brain trusters are spending out of the public's resources to swing the next election to the right side. The sad part of the affair is that the American people can view such stupendous and wasteful expenditure without feeling panicky and sick at the stomach.

The type of mind which thinks the money barons—the "they" of the markets—control markets naturally thinks of that public enemy only when prices go down. If the money changers are trying to bring on a stock market panic to embarrass Roosevelt, they seem to have been a bit misguided when they treated the country to a 12 months' uninterrupted bull market that culminated two or three weeks ago. Perhaps they thought that also would embarrass Roosevelt.

French Group Says Reds Help Reich to Arm

By the Associated Press.

Paris, April 24.—Danger of war with Germany dominated tonight the campaign between right and left wings of French politics in the closing hours before Sunday's Chamber of Deputies election.

The powerful "Comite des Forges," representing the iron and steel industry, injected into the electioneering a denial of Communist accusations it was aiding Germany to arm.

Lieut. Col. Francis de la Rocque, whose 700,000 Nationalistic Croix de Feu followers are expected to throw their votes to Rightist candidates, joined in the verbal attacks on Communists.

Bolshevik Dictatorship.

"You do not want a Bolshevik dictatorship any more than you want an imitation of Fascist and Hitlerite procedures," he declared.

A French government communication, meanwhile, was placed in the hands of Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary, requesting interrogation of Germany's colonial policy.

Seeking an exact definition of the term "German equality," the British minister was asked to determine the position of Reichsfuehrer Hitler and avoid generalities leading to "interminable interpretation and clarifications."

Premier Albert Sarraut called the French cabinet together to discuss measures to maintain order in the capital and country during the voting. In addition to the ministers, members of the army general staff and heads of the Paris police and Surete Nationale, the French "Scotland Yard," attended.

Strike Called Off.

One threat to public order during the celebration of the Leftist labor day was removed when a strike which would have called upon 150,000 miners to lay down their tools was called off. The walkout was originally called for May 1.

Representatives of the miners and operators, at odds over a wage reduction, were reported to have reached an agreement which would be submitted for ratification. If the terms are accepted, a final settlement will be signed Tuesday.

The balloting Sunday will complete only the first stage of the chamber elections, with 612 places to be filled.

To win in the first vote, a candidate must obtain more than half the votes in his district. For those candidates who fail to achieve the necessary majority, run-off elections will be held May 3.

Proceeds Cautiously.

London, April 24 (AP).—Authoritative British sources said tonight Anthony Eden is proceeding cautiously in preparation of questions the British foreign secretary will submit to Adolf Hitler for clarification of the Nazi peace proposals.

These sources asserted Eden desires to insure every possible chance for success in the interrogation of the German counter-proposals to the Locarno accord for a new European security.

The British are keeping in touch with the French while further contacts will be made with Belgium to be certain Great Britain understands fully the points each nation considers important for clarification.

While the basis of the questionnaire will be the asking of specific answers on Germany's foreign and colonial policies, it was said that even points made in important speeches will be taken into consideration.

The British brief has not been assembled, but informed sources said when the situation has been thoroughly canvassed the questions will be presented in the manner which the British think best for a constructive solution of problems arising from the German denunciation of the Locarno Pact.

The questionnaire probably will be sent to Berlin at the end of next week.

Lobby Investigator Defied by Woman

New York, April 24 (AP).—An investigator for the Black lobby committee was refused the files of Women Investors in America, Inc., a nonprofit organization, when he asked for them last Friday, President Katherine Curtis said today.

In Washington, Chairman Black quoted Miss Curtis as telling the investigator that she could not appear next Tuesday before the committee in response to a subpena served on her.

She was told, added Black, to come to Washington at her convenience, and he said he had had a letter from her saying she had not refused to appear.

Miss Curtis described the work of her organization as "educational and protective, giving women instruction in the fundamentals of finance and investment from the standpoint of public welfare, citizenship and good government."

"I didn't give the investigator our files," she explained, "because I was not authorized to do so. I have a board of directors to which I am responsible."

Progress Is Reported In G.O.P. Unit Work

Fredericksburg, Va., April 24.—Encouraging progress in the organization of the Young Republican Clubs of the First Congressional District was reported today by S. P. Powell, former Commonwealth's attorney for Spotsylvania County, who is in charge of the effort.

Powell said that he had obtained a large number of charter members in the 16 counties and three cities in the First District.

Lynchburg Coin Favored.

The Senate yesterday passed and sent to the House the Glass (Democrat of Virginia) bill authorizing the coinage of 20,000 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the issuance of the charter of the City of Lynchburg, according to the Associated Press.

100-Ton Tanks Urged For the German Army

Berlin, April 25 (U.P.).—Giant tanks, weighing 100 tons each, are advocated for the German army by Wim Brandt, noted writer on military affairs, in the Militaerisches Wochenblatt.

In view of Germany's lack of oil supplies, he points out, it cannot face another long war of trench fighting, and therefore must have great land battleships to force the issue quickly. He emphasizes the fallacy of the assumption that future wars will be shortened by planes destroying an enemy's armaments industry.

As to cost, Brandt points out that a 100-ton tank would cost the same as a warship ton for ton, and so Germany could have 100 giant tanks for the cost of one "pocket battleship." His final warning to the aviation optimists is:

"Don't let us forget that the champions of submarines once promised to destroy our enemy's shipping. It is always a long way between will and ability."

Brust's Name Must Go On Ballot, Is Ruling

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., April 24.—Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor today ruled that the name of August T. Brust, of Frederick, will have to appear on the Democratic primary ballot as a candidate to the State Presidential convention.

Brust today filed a withdrawal from the contest, explaining that he wished to avoid a contest in the party. He is one of six candidates aligned with the Conley faction.

Italians Launch Greatest Drive, Seize Key City

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Rome, April 24.—Gen. Rodolpho Graziani today threw the full force of his Somaliland front army into the greatest battle of the southern Ethiopian campaign.

Furious fighting, with heavy casualties on both sides, has been raging since dawn at Baneh, where the Dedjazmatch Nasibu, governor of Harar Province, has concentrated his best troops under command of the Turkish general, Waheb Pasha, hero of the World War Dardanelles campaign.

Italian military authorities expect the capture of Sasa Baneh momentarily. It would leave the way open for a decisive battle at Jijiga, Ethiopian natural fortress guarding the road to Harar and Diredawa, the latter located on Ethiopia's only railway. Military officials confidently expect the fall of Jijiga and the occupation of Harar next week.

Warriors Isolated.

While Graziani's troops shelled the pasha's shock forces, the column moved up the border trace between Ethiopia and British Somaliland and cut in to Daggar Bur, encircling thousands of Ethiopian warriors.

Meanwhile, another column pushing northward and west of Graziani's main force threatened to sever Ethiopian communications between Harar and Jijiga. It was reported moving rapidly up the valley of the Fanfan toward Nasibu's provincial capital.

Daggar Bur was heavily fortified. Meager dispatches indicate that large numbers of Ethiopians died in the trenches encircling their Daggar Bur encampment. Daggar Bur is important to the Italian forces not only because it is astride an important road running straight into Jijiga but because there is ample fresh water there.

The motorized column occupying Daggar Bur was commanded by Gen. Vittorio Verne, vice commander of the Black Shirt Tevere Division.

Ethiopians Bombed.

Italian commanders said the loss of Daggar Bur makes the position of Waheb Pasha and his defending forces at Sasa Baneh untenable. The capture of Sasa Baneh was expected before morning.

Verne's forces, upon entering the Daggar Bur encampment, found splendid Ethiopian fortifications designed in the most modern manner by Belgian military advisers assigned to the pasha's command but since recalled by their government.

While Graziani's troops fought furiously before Sasa Baneh, Marshal Pietro Badoglio, from his general headquarters at Dessye, sent out a column of Eritrean soldiers which occupied Worrah without resistance.

The President also nominated Joseph E. Parker to be State administrator of the Works Progress Administration for Montana; Alexander Allaire to be State director of the Public Works Administration in Arkansas, and Henry S. Giesmer to be State director of the Public Works Administration in Alabama.

Jobs Insurance Held Up to States

New York, April 24 (AP).—The ninth national conference on social security was told tonight that emphasis on unemployment insurance must come primarily from the States and not from the Federal Government.

Merrill G. Murray, staff member of the Social Security Board, declared "the role of the Federal Government in unemployment compensation is secondary to the role which must be played by the States. The important decisions as to whether there will be unemployment compensation legislation and what form it will take rests with them."

Such legislation, Murray said, must be administered by a nonpolitical and efficient personnel.

Prof. Paul H. Douglas, of the University of Chicago, said the solution of unemployment lies in the direction of further extension of State unemployment insurance legislation.

He praised the Federal social security act for the impetus it gave State legislation, but said there would be serious consequences if any court decision invalidated the Federal act, because the operation of many new laws was contingent on the national act.

President May Attend Texas Centennial Fete

By the Associated Press.

Senator Connally (Democrat), Texas, said yesterday President Roosevelt now planned to be at Houston, Texas, June 4, and Dallas, June 6, for the opening of the Texas Centennial.

But he added:

"On account of the uncertainty of the adjournment of Congress, it cannot be stated definitely that the President will make the Texas trip at that time."

Senate Moves to Seek AAA Payment Data

By unanimous agreement, the Senate decided yesterday to take up next Monday the Vandenberg resolution asking Secretary of Agriculture Wallace to report all AAA payments exceeding $10,000 a year.

Doris Duke on Visit.

Newport News, Va., April 24 (AP).—Mrs. James H. R. Cromwell, formerly Doris Duke, one of the world's richest women, accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Benjamin Duke, was a visitor in Williamsburg yesterday. The party was on the way North.

Flier Leaps Too Late, Is Killed as Plane Falls

Atlanta, April 24 (AP).—A college student flier was killed near here tonight when he leaped from his falling airplane too close to the ground for his parachute to save him.

Officials of the flying service from which he rented the training plane said he was Gene Batson, 19, of Milard, Miss., a junior in the school of mechanical engineering at Georgia Tech. Batson had been a student pilot for about a year and a half, flying service officials said.

Aberdeen Tests Slated For High-Speed Tank

Rock Island, Ill., April 24 (AP)—The new high speed U. S. Army tank, which recently completed a 1,075-mile test run from Dallas, Tex., to Rock Island in the record time of slightly more than 32 hours, will be given another test May 6, Col. A. G. Gillespie, Arsenal commandant, announced today.

It will be shipped to the Aberdeen Proving Grounds at Aberdeen, Md., where it will be demonstrated before Army experts.

Coal Weight Law Favored by Bureau

The Federal Bureau of the Budget yesterday told the District Commissioners it had no objections to the proposal of the city heads to seek enactment of a law which would prescribe weights at which packaged coal and coke might be sold in the District.

The measure is to be sent to Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, chairman of the Senate District Committee, and Representative Mary T. Norton (Democrat), of New Jersey, chairman of the House District Committee.

George M. Roberts, superintendent of weights and measures of the District, sponsored the measure as a means of preventing unscrupulous dealers in packaged coal and coke from charging the poor who bought their goods exorbitant prices. Under the bill packages must contain either 50, 25 or 15 pounds and the net weight must be plainly and conspicuously displayed on the outside of each package along with the name of the dealer who prepared the package.
